Stockholm, May 29. There was a Court Yesterday at Dronningholm, when the French Ambassador had Audience of the Royal Family, to notify the Birth of the Princess, of which the Dauphiness was lately brought to Bed.

Venice, May 30. His Royal Highness the Duke of York entered the Venetian State, from Mantua, on Friday the 25th Instant; and was escorted from the Frontiers by Detachments of Light Dalmatian Cavalry to Verona. His Royal Highness having before signified his Intention of not making any Stay there, prevented the Exhibition of a Bull Feast, prepared to be made in the Roman Amphitheatre; which was to have been lighted by many Thousand Torches, and filled with People: It will contain 22,500. The Podestà, M. Cornero, waited upon his Royal Highness at his Inn, to compliment him upon his Arrival; and the next Morning early his Royal Highness pursued his Journey for Venice, escorted again by Detachments of Dalmatian Cavalry. As his Royal Highness only got out of his Coach to see the Olympick Theatre at Vicenza, the Podestà sent a Deputy to compliment him at the Coach-Door. From thence his Royal Highness proceeded to Padua, where he dined, and was complimented by the Proveditor, M. Vendramin, attended by the principal Nobility of that Place; and the same Evening proceeded to Venice, where he arrived in perfect Health. The next Morning his Royal Highness received the Compliments of four Venetian Noblemen, Giovanni Grimani, Francesco Pesaro, Vettor Pisani, and Marco Priuli; who had been appointed by the Doge, as Deputies to attend him during his Stay here. In the Evening his Royal Highness went to a very large Box, richly furnished for his Reception, to see the Opera of Caius Marius represented in the Great Theatre at St. John Chrysostom's, and was attended there by the Deputies; as he was also the following Night in a Box finely fitted up to see the Opera of Sophonisba in the Theatre of St. Luke's. Yesterday his Royal Highness, attended by the Deputies, and a great Number of English Noblemen and Gentlemen, went to see the Arsenal, where many of the Venetian Nobility of both Sexes were assembled to pay their Respects to him. He was conducted to the different Parts in a fine Felucca, built on Purpose, and rowed by Men dressed in the English Manner: There were three other Feluccas rowed by Men all dressed like English Sailors, which were filled with English and other Foreigners of Distinction, and with Noble Venetians of both Sexes. Three Thousand Hands were employed in building and fitting out Ships and Galleys. His Royal Highness visited the Rope-Walk, where they were making Cables for an Eighty Gun Ship, and saw in other Places the Forging of Anchors, and Casting of a Cannon for Forty Pound Balls; was shewn the different Stores, and conducted into the great Armory, where there was a Refreshment, and a Concert of Musick, and from the Balcony saw the Shews called le Forze d'Ercole and the Moresca Dance. His Royal Highness went on Board the Bucentoro, and afterwards saw it launched. While his Royal Highness was in the Arsenal, they began to build a large Galley, which he saw in great Forwardness.

The Magistrates of Health have received still more favourable Accounts of the Plague in Dalmatia.
