Copthall Buildings, August 16, 1782.

ON the Night of Friday the Second Instant, my Counting-house in Copthall Buildings, Throgmorton-street, was broke open; and a Box, mark'd 1781, and a small Case of Drawers, carried away from it; they contained Papers, among which was a Bill of Exchange, drawn by Pat. Dease, Esq; of Dublin, on me for 191. os. 11 d., to Order of Mr. F. Cruise, and one drawn by Dom. Duany, Esq; of Warfield, for 15 l. to Order of William Lawrence; the first was accepted, but not endorsed; the latter was not accepted: There were also a considerable Number of Bills of Exchange on me, which I paid in the Course of last Year, as well as a Number of my Drafts, on Messrs. Fullers, Sons, and Vaughan, which were discharged by them during that Period: As Attempts may be made to obtain Value for some of these, I take this Method of cautioning the Public against being imposed on by any such.

A few of the Papers contained in the Box were found in the last Week near Whitechapel, and have been restored to me; should the Remainder come into the Possession of any Person by similar Means, I will pay such Person Ten Pounds or more, by delivering them to me; and I will pay Twenty Pounds to any Person who discovers the Perpetrator or Perpetrators of this Felony, so that he or they may be convicted of it.
