(Translation.)

AN Order of the Senate of Bremen prescribing Measures to prevent the Importation of Contagious Diseases.

§ 1. All seagoing vessels arriving at Bremen or Bremerhaven or lying in harbour at those places are liable to sanitary police inspection held by the Port Doctor and his assistants.

§ 2. Masters or their substitutes are bound to afford the sanitary officials access to every part of the ship, to supply them with every desired information, and, on request, to produce to them the ship's papers.

§ 3. Masters, officers, and crews may not leave the ship on her arrival until the first inspection by the sanitary police officials has taken place, and must comply with all orders from the sanitary officials.

§ 4. Persons suffering from contagious diseases, fever, cholera, cutaneous affections, or scurvy, may only leave the ship after they have been examined by, and with the permission of, the Port Doctor.

§ 5. Notice must be given as soon as possible by the Master or his substitute, either personally or through the harbour police to the Port Doctor, of all internal complaints which may occur on board ship during her stay in port.

§ 6. Infringements of this Order are punishable with fine not exceeding 150 marks, or imprisonment for a period not exceeding six weeks.

§ 7. This Order will come into force on the 1st September, 1900, and may, by decision of the competent Health Department, apply also to river boats.
