The QUEEN has been graciously pleased to make the following appointments to Her Majesty's Household:

Home Office,
Whitehall, London S.W.1.
4th November 1960.

The following Addresses were presented to The QUEEN by the Mayor of Croydon and the Chairman of the Governors of the Technical College on the occasion of the opening by Her Majesty of the Croydon Technical College and the Croydon College of Art on the 2nd instant:

May it please Your Majesty,

It is my privilege to speak for the 250,000 people of Croydon and to offer to you, Madam, and to His Royal Highness, their loyal and loving welcome to this town.

We were indeed happy when we learned that you both had kindly consented to visit us and to come to Croydon in the year of its Millenary.

It is, in 1960, a thousand years since the Priest of Croydon subscribed his name as witness to the will of a Saxon thane and so documented our claim to a millenium of recorded history. An Archbishop of Canterbury was also a witness to that Saxon will and, to this day the Archbishop is Lord of the Manor of Croydon. It is true, Madam, that we should be hard put to find the Manor for His Grace but it is our pride that this ancient link with the See of Canterbury continues to this day.

When Croydon was a quiet town in Surrey it was the country seat of the Archbishops and they were visited at Croydon Palace by many of the sovereigns of England. There are many places in England who claim that "Queen Elizabeth slept here". Croydon is unique in being able to say it and prove it. Not only can we show you the Queen's Bedchamber at the Archbishop's Palace of Croydon, but we can document our claim to fame by citing State papers given under the Queen's own hand and despatched from the town of Croydon. But until this happy day we have never been visited officially by the reigning monarch and truly, Madam, your gracious presence here today sets a royal seal on our long history.

We have another link with Your Royal House which will be nearer to your heart today. At the famous Airport from which the name of Croydon was carried all over the world, your late beloved father trained as an air pilot and there received his pilot's wings.

In the name of every man, woman and child of Croydon I thank you for coming among us today, and I wish for the continued health and happiness of your Royal Person, of His Royal Highness and of all your family.

I now call upon the Chairman of the Governors of the Technical College to invite you, Madam, to open these Colleges.

May it please Your Majesty,

Although this building is the newest and, we think, the best technical college in the country, technical education is no new thing in Croydon. As long ago as 1838 in the second year of the reign of Queen Victoria, the Croydon Literary and Scientific Society opened classes in science and philosophy to its members and to this we trace the beginning of adult education in our town.

Seventy two years ago, the curate of Croydon Parish Church organised technical classes for artisans. His students paid a penny a week for each subject studied, and this reasonable sum covered not only their tuition but their use of tools and materials.

These modest beginnings led the Croydon Corporation, after two years, to vote £3,000 to establish a Polytechnic and in 1891, the classes founded by the curate of the parish were housed in a building opened by the Archbishop of Canterbury. We do not know whether the curate was later as successful as his classes but it is fitting that the name of the Reverend Oakley Coles should be remembered and honoured in this hall today. It is fitting too that the name of Denning should be remembered, for the Denning Hall in which we are now assembled is a gift to Croydon from the will of Mrs. Denning, widow of Alderman Denning who was Mayor of Croydon from 1913 to 1916. Mrs. Denning's will provided a foundation, one of whose principal functions was to provide a hall for lectures in mechanical science. The trustees of that foundation agreed that the hall should be built within the precincts of our two colleges and their enlightened action has meant that we have this beautiful room to be used by the Colleges and the town for the purposes of the bequest.

Ever since technical education began in Croydon, our doors have been thronged with young men and women demanding instruction. They come to us to be taught in science, technology and the arts and we have not forgotten the arts. In this building we have housed also the Croydon College of Art which in this decade will celebrate a century of lively existence since its foundation in 1868 by the Literary and Scientific Society. We feel that this is a happy union which has more than merely practical reasons to justify it and we shall watch with interest the influence of the technicians upon the artists and of the gentler arts upon the sterner sciences.

This building, Madam, is a tangible expression of our faith in the youth of your realm and of our concern for its future. We deeply believe that the future prosperity of this country, and indeed its continued safety depends upon the development and education of our young people. We know that our country must use its brains to survive and flourish, and that we must see to it that our native talents are given every possible chance of fulfilment.

The Croydon Colleges are our contribution to that chance of fulfilment, and ten thousand students will be able here, to take that chance.

We are especially happy that Your Majesty should be accompanied this afternoon by His Royal Highness. His alert interest in science and technology has, in recent years, been an inspiration to us, and we greatly look forward to showing him our equipment which enables us to offer instruction in subjects as diverse as Theatre Design, Mechanical Engineering, Pottery or Radio Isotopes. We await with lively hope, and in some trepidation, his constructive criticism of our efforts.

Your Majesty, I have the honour respectfully to ask you to declare open the Croydon Technical College and the Croydon College of Art.

To which Addresses Her Majesty was pleased to return the following gracious Answer:

Mr. Mayor, Mr. Chairman,

My husband and I thank you both for the kindness of your welcome and are very pleased to join with you today in celebrating Croydon's Millenary.

We have heard with interest of Croydon's links with the Church over many centuries. Today, a highly developed urban community, it bears little resemblance to that market town known to the Archbishops who had their country home here. But I am glad to know that its long association with the Church finds practical expression now in the close and friendly relationship between the civic and ecclesiastical authorities.

In the past clergy and laity have played their part in providing educational facilities here in Croydon. Today we see the completion of the new Technical College and College of Arts, which forms an important part of the town's central redevelopment scheme. In this one large building they have made full provision for the study of both the sciences and the fine arts, and I am confident that all branches of industry, commerce and the arts in the town will respond by continuing and increasing their support in advancing the cause of further education.

In this modern age trained scientists, technicians and craftsmen are vitally necessary for our continued progress and prosperity. It is no less important, however, that they should meet and exchange ideas with those trained in other fields of knowledge. The liberal atmosphere that arises from this interchange will, I am sure, be fostered here by the placing of the two Colleges under one roof. This large hall, so generously provided from the benefaction of the late Mrs. Denning, will moreover be available, not only to serve the two Colleges, but as a centre for the exchange and spread of scientific and cultural ideas throughout the whole community.

My husband and I congratulate all who have taken part in the planning of this imaginative experiment and in the construction and equipping of the building, and it is with much pleasure that I now declare it open and wish good fortune to all who work, whether as teachers or students, within its walls.
