The Conservation Area is irregular in shape and generally comprises the historic heart of the village around the square as well as much of the built up part of the village to the south and properties beyond the railway embankment to the north.

The boundary of the Conservation Area is briefly described as follows: Commencing at the point adjacent to the embankment to the south of the railway bridge, the boundary runs to the west alongside the embankment as far as the open area adjacent to the Scout Hut where it turns south to include the curtilage of Brook House before running irregularly in a south-easterly direction skirting Lewis' Yard and the curtilage of the New Fountain Inn public house.

It then crosses Church Road, takes in Rose Cottage before turning north along the rear boundaries of properties facing Church Road as far as Pinecroft. At this point, it deviates to the east to include land to the rear of Glencroft and Hillcroft before running north to the rear of properties in Rectory Close, the Post Office and other properties fronting onto Church Road as far as Grove Road.

The boundary then runs under the railway bridge before turning east along the embankment and then doubling back sharply to include the primary school. At this point, it follows Broadway as far as the junction with the Talaton-Broadclyst road where it turns east adjacent to the rear of the former Whiteways factory building as far as The Firs.

It then turns north to include The Firs, and then runs irregularly in a westerly direction to take in the New Inn and adjacent land. The boundary then turns to the south to the west of Hazel Cottages before running generally in a southerly direction to include properties along the west frontage of Broadway and the extensive curtilage of Sandfords beyond which it reaches the railway bridge.
