WHITEHALL, July 22, 1910.

The King has been pleased to award the Edward Medal of the First Class to Mr. William Henry Pickering, one of His Majesty's Inspectors of Mines, and to Mr. George Handle Silkstone, an Enginewright, also the Edward Medal of the Second Class to Mr. Isaac Hodges, Mining Agent, Mr. Albert Moore, Chargeman Sinker, Mr. James Hosey, Sinking Contractor, and Mr. Alfred Jones, Surface Foreman, under the following circumstances.

A serious shaft accident occurred on the 7th May last, at the Water Haigh Mine, by which six men lost their lives. The mine, which is situated at Oulton, about five miles east of Leeds, consists of four pits in course of sinking to develop a new mining area. Shaft No. 1 where the accident happened had been sunk to a depth of 109 yards, and the work of lining it with brickwork was being proceeded with. Skeleton iron rings are used to support the shaft during the process and it is necessary to remove these as the work of the bricking progresses.

At about 8 A.M. on the day mentioned, seven workmen, including a chargeman, were standing on a heavy scaffold, secured by bolts into the side of the shaft, engaged in the work of removing one of the iron rings. The chargeman, evidently having noticed some indication of danger, sent one of the men to the surface to call the master sinker, and, shortly after he had left, the scaffold gave way. Five of the men were hurled to the bottom of the shaft, and killed on the spot; but one of them, Patrick M'Carthy, met with a less merciful death, being trapped by the legs between the heavy scaffold and the side of the shaft and partly buried by shale falling from the side, where he lingered in agony for over seven hours. Persistent efforts were made to rescue M'Carthy from his perilous position.

Silkstone, Moore, Hosey and Jones were among the first to descend the pit when it was known that an accident had happened. In response to M'Carthy's cries for help, they tried to release him in spite of imminent danger from falling stones and bricks, but they were obliged to return to the surface for tools. Mr. Hodges, who had by this time reached the mine, immediately went down the pit and decided to build a temporary scaffold. Moore was given charge of this work and carried it out with admirable coolness and resource.

Mr. Pickering, His Majesty's Inspector of Mines, arrived on the scene just when this was completed, and accompanied by Mr. Hodges and Silkstone, Moore and Hosey, he entered the pit and reached the place where poor M'Carthy was held a prisoner. In this descent Silkstone's head was severely injured by a falling stone, and Mr. Hodges and Hosey were also slightly injured. They found M'Carthy still alive but the water was rising fast in the shaft and had reached his shoulders. It was evident that he would soon be drowned and that nothing could be done further to rescue him unless the water were lowered. Mr. Pickering at once sent all his fellow rescuers to the surface to enable a larger "bowl" to be put on and more men to be sent down to bale the water. In the meantime Mr. Pickering resolutely stayed by M'Carthy—now almost delirious with his sufferings—and supporting his head on his arms and breast, he administered such comfort as he could to the dying man. Realising that M'Carthy could not live until the water was baled out, Mr. Pickering decided that the only hope was immediate amputation of the legs, and at his request Mr. Hodges brought down two doctors and a Roman Catholic Priest, but M'Carthy's terrible sufferings came to an end just as they reached him.

Mr. Pickering ran imminent risk of losing his life during the time that he stayed with M'Carthy. Silkstone descended the pit no less than four times and did not desist until he had been severely injured. Mr. Hodges went down with three separate parties and displayed great bravery and skill in directing the work of the attempted rescue. Moore and Hosey also made three descents and showed great courage and presence of mind in face of danger, while Jones, who organised the first rescue party, was only prevented from continuing his brave endeavours by being injured so seriously that he could not return to work for six weeks.

On the 11th May 1910, a terrible fire occurred in the Wellington Pit, Whitehaven, at a point about 4500 yards from the shafts. Various rescue parties, with great courage and self-devotion and at considerable risk, descended the mine and endeavoured to extinguish the fire and penetrate to the persons in the workings beyond the same. Thorne and Littlewood, fitted with breathing apparatus, reached within a distance of 150 yards of the fire, but were driven back by the great heat and effusion of gases. The others got to within about 300 yards of the fire, working in the smoke backing from the fire. It was found impossible to penetrate to the scene of the fire or to rescue any of the entombed miners.

Had an explosion occurred—a by no means unlikely eventuality, seeing that the mine is a very gassy one—they would undoubtedly all have been killed.

Special gallantry was shown by John Henry Thorne, to whom the Edward Medal of the First Class has already been awarded, and by James Littlewood.
