Whitehall, June 25, 1925.

His Majesty The KING has been graciously pleased to award the Edward Medal to Mr. Matthew James Campbell for his bravery in the following circumstances:—

On 27th October 1924, while Campbell, together with two other men named George Lawton and William Lambking, was working in a shaft of the Northern Suburbs Ocean Outfall Sewer at Sydney, New South Wales, a hammer used in pile driving gave way and carried away the greater part of the staging about 200 feet from the bottom of the shaft on which the men were working. Both Lawton and Lambking were injured, but Campbell, who was unhurt, managed to hold them one in each arm until his strength was exhausted and he had to loose his hold of Lawton, who fell to the bottom and was killed. Campbell managed to retain his hold of Lambking: he succeeded in placing him in a bucket and getting him drawn to the surface. He then went down to the bottom of the shaft alone to render any help he could to Lawton but, finding him dead, placed the body in the bucket and it was brought to the surface. By this time Campbell was absolutely exhausted
