PERFORMING RIGHT TRIBUNAL THE REFERENCE OF BARRINGTON ELECTRONICS LTD.

SHORT PARTICULARS OF THE DECISION

BARRINGTON ELECTRONICS LTD. is a private limited company which, amongst other things, carries on a business of placing on suitable sites coin operated automatic gramophones, commonly known as juke boxes. Since they control and "site" almost 100 such juke boxes, they are classified for licensing purposes as "multiple operators."

Their juke boxes are moved from site to site as policy or circumstances may require, and the division of the fortnightly "take" between themselves and the site-owners is a matter of individual negotiation and agreement.

The juke boxes in question are nearly all of a model which carries 30 2-sided records, which are classified as "60-selection machines," and the agreed sites are mostly cafes and public houses, scattered over a wide area.

The Licensing Body in this reference was Phonographic Performance Ltd., a company which has agreements with the owners of the performing right in sound recordings whereby the Licensing Body becomes the assignee of those rights, but stands possessed, in trust for the respective owners, of the amounts collected in respect of the relative licence fees charged for the performance in public of those sound recordings. The trusts on which those amounts are held for distribution are not relevant to this reference.

The assignors of these rights are the makers of gramophone records, and comprise all but an insignificant minority of such makers with whom juke box operators are concerned.

In January, 1958, the Licensing Body entered into agreements with three organisations representing between them some 80% of the "multiple operators" of all juke boxes known to the Licensing Body. By those agreements, the members of those organisations accepted a scheme relating to "multiple operators" propounded by the Licensing Body. In accordance with the provisions of this scheme, any "multiple operator" can, for a fee of £4. 12. 0 per machine, obtain a licence for a year entitling such operator to perform in public any sound recording which has become vested in the Licensing Body.

It was this scheme which Barrington Electronics Ltd. referred to the Tribunal.

The complaint made was that the scheme was both unjustifiable and unfair; unjustifiable because (it was contended) the price paid to buy a gramophone record in itself covered the right to perform it; and unfair because a flat rate was exacted as a fee, regardless of the "selection" of the machine, and irrespective of the remunerative quality of the site on which it was placed.

The Tribunal concluded that the complaint was not well founded on either ground. The right to perform a gramophone record which a purchaser acquires does not extend in law to a right to perform it in public. The copyright as regards the latter is legally vested (by the provisions of s.12 of the Copyright Act, 1956) in the maker of the sound recording, and is quite independent of the sale of the record. Furthermore, Barrington Electronics Ltd. having applied for a licence under the scheme, cannot at the same time deny the right of the Licensing Body to grant one.

As to the flat rate, this commended itself to the Tribunal as the only practicable method of arriving at a reasonable figure, provided that the amount of the fee was not in itself oppressive. The actual amount, which is the equivalent of 1s. 9d. per juke box per week did not seem an excessive charge to make in all the circumstances. Any more complicated method of computation, moreover, would involve an increased cost of administration which would add to rather than subtract from the burden that the operator would have to bear.

The Tribunal also took note of the fact that the scheme had been agreed with the great majority of "multiple" juke box operators and that Barrington Electronics Ltd. stood alone in seeking to challenge it. At one stage a company known as Sales Agencies Ltd. had joined in the reference, but had withdrawn at the opening of the hearing.

In the result, there being no class other than "multiple operators" to which the scheme related, the Tribunal confirmed the scheme. Barrington Electronics Ltd. was ordered to contribute 100 guineas towards the costs of the Licensing Body.

A copy of the Decision may be inspected at the offices of the Tribunal during office hours.
