FOREIGN OFFICE, February 16, 1887.

The British Directors of the Suez Canal Company have forwarded to the Marquis of Salisbury the following New Provisional Regulations for the Navigation of the Canal at night by means of electric light:—

ART. 1. From the 1st March 1887, and until further order, steamers may be permitted to navigate the canal at night under the same conditions as are in force for navigation by day, and subject to the following regulations:—

ART. 2. Steamers intending to go through the canal at night must first satisfy the Agents of the Company in Port Said or Port Tewfik that they are provided:

1st. Forward with an electric 'projector,' throwing a light 1200 metres a head. This projector must be placed as near as possible to the water-line.

2nd. With an electric lamp and shade suspended above the upper deck, and powerful enough to light up a circular area of about 200 metres diameter.

The Agents of the Company will decide whether the apparatus fulfil the requirements of the regulations, so that ships provided with them may, without inconvenience, be authorised to navigate the canal at night.

ART. 3. If a vessel, navigating by night, is ordered to get into a siding, she must, immediately on having done so, put out her electric lamps; but she must carry exclusively the regulation lights when in a siding at night, viz. forward and aft a white light, and a man on the look-out.

On the nearing of tugs, steam launches, hopper barges, &c., or of a ship empowered to pass her, she must show the side for free passage by exhibiting on such side two white lights.

ART. 4. When two or more ships having electric lights are navigating at night in one and the same direction, and any one of them stops, she must at once hoist a red light at her mizen-mast head, sounding at the same time her steam-whistle sharply three times in close succession, repeating this at a few moments' interval, until the ship following her repeats this signal, which shall be taken as an order to slacken speed at once with a view to stopping, if need be.

ART. 5. Dredgers working at night must carry a red light at their head as long as they are not in a siding.

ART. 6. As soon as a ship navigating by night finds herself three miles from a dredger at work in the canal, she must signal her approach by sending up three rockets in succession. This signal must be repeated until the dredger has replied. The dredger must reply with one rocket. As soon as the dredger is in the siding, she must replace the red light at her head by a white light, and place two additional white lights on her bulwarks on the channel side.

Dredgers lighted by electricity must extinguish all their electric lights as soon as they are in a siding.

ART. 7. The signals from sidings to ships navigating at night will be as follows:—

1st. Slacken Speed.—Three white lights one above the other.

2nd. Get into the Siding.—Two white lights one above the other.

3rd. Pass On.—One white light.

When the above signals are intended for a ship coming from the north, a fixed red light will be shown above them. On the contrary, this red light will be placed below them when intended for ships coming from the south.
