

Breslaw, October 20. The King of Prussia still remains at Peterwaldau, and on the 16th detached Lieutenant General Neuweidt with 20 Battalions and 43 Squadrons into Saxony. Marshal Daun had not moved from Scherffnick near Glatz; and it was supposed that his Prussian Majesty would regulate his Motions by Those of the Austrian General.

They are sending away by Water, the Officers who were made Prisoners at Schweidnitz. Many of the Soldiers take Service, the rest are to be conducted by Land to Glogau, and thence to Stettin.

There are upwards of Ten Thousand Recruits come from Prussia. Those destined for the Regiments that have suffered in the late Siege, are arrived here; the rest are still at Berlin.

Major General Knobloch is appointed Commandant of Schweidnitz.

Hamburg, October 29. The first Column of the Corps of Troops, which the King of Prussia has detached under the Command of Lieutenant General Count de Neuweidt, in order to reinforce Prince Henry's Army in Saxony, was to arrive, on the 26th, at Meissen, and to cross the Elbe there.

Hague, November 2. The Siege of Cassel is carried on with great Vivacity: The Governor has made frequent Sallies, in which both Sides suffered some Loss. By the last Accounts from before the Place, the Fire of the Besieged, since the Batteries were opened against the Town, had diminished considerably. The French Army still kept its Position upon the Ohme, opposite to the Allies; but Accounts from Brunswick represent them as on the Point of going into Winter Quarters.
