Cracow, April 25.

THE Dyec having had so happy a conclusion, to the satisfaction of all good Men, his Majesty pursuant to the resolutions that were there taken, is making the necessary preparations against the approaching Campagne, which according to his Majesties intentions, will be begun in a Month or six Weeks, orders having been sent to all the general Officers and others to make themselves ready to march. In the mean time, it hath been resolved by the King and the Senate, to send an Ambassador to Mosco, as well to complement the young Czar upon the death of his Father, as to endeavor to dispose the said Ministers to a sincere compliance with the promises and obligations they lie under to assist this Crown against the common Enemy the Turks; of whose great preparations we have had frequent accounts during the Winter; but at present the Letters from the Port speak not so big, and even assure us, that the Grand Signior will not go into the Field this Summer with the Army; and it is ever questioned whether the Grand Visier will be in person with it. We are told, that the King has desired His Majesty of Great Britain to be Godfather to the young Princes; of which the Queen lately lay in of.

Venice, April 26. The last week we had Letters of the tenth of March from Constantinople, which tell us, That the Grand Signior remained at Adrianople, diverting himself frequently with hunting in those parts. And that a new Seraglio was there building for the Women; which is an argument of the Grand Signiors intention to continue his residence there, and not to return to Constantinople. On Wednesday last parted hence Cavalier Foscari, to take possession of his command of Captain of the Gulf.

Madrid, April 26. Their Majesties continue with the whole Court at Aranjues, and as yet there is no thoughts of their return hither till about the middle of the next Month. There is some talk of the Kings journey to Aragon, which is very much desired by the States of that Kingdom, but without any certainty. Here are still frequent reports spread abroad of Don Juan of Austria's being sent for to Court, and sometimes they will have it, that he is already come to Town privately, but they are all without the least ground, his Highness continuing at Saragosa, without any appearance of removing from thence. We are not without a concern for Catalonia, for every body says, that that Country is not in a posture to make head against the French, who will attack it with a good body of an Army this Summer, under the Command of the Duke of Navailles.

Vienna, April 28. The Regiments which were quartered in Bohemia and those parts, are marched towards the Rhine, to the Rendezvous of the Imperial Army, which is to be the beginning of the next Month near Hailbron. It was, as we are informed, agreed some Months since at the Hague, by the Ministers of the Allies, that their Troops should before this time have besieged Stade, and that when the place was taken, it should be put into the hands of the Emperor, till such time it should be finally agreed to whose repartition that place should belong; but since we understand, that the Confederates have fallen from this agreement, and that that is the reason why the Siege is delayed. Two days since arrived here an Express from the Elector of Saxony, but on what errand we as yet know not.

Strasbourg, May 6. The Imperial Troops begin to march towards the Rhine, their Rendezvous being appointed near Lauterburg. The Troops of the Duke of Lorraine are this day arrived at Offenburg, three Leagues from hence, having orders to continue their march from thence to Lauterburg: The Duke of Lorraine is arrived in the Camp before Philipsbourg, which is at present sufficiently blocked up on all sides; but as yet we cannot learn whether the Empress intends to besiege it in form, it being rather believed, that the Duke of Lorraine will endeavor to join into Lorraine with his Army. We have had several reports here this last week, as if the Emperor was dangerously ill; though our last Letters from Vienna onely told us, that his Imperial Majesty was a little indisposed, to which his affliction for the death of the Empress had it's believed very much contributed.

Philipsbourg, May 6. Several Troops, as well of the Emperor as of the Circles have within these four or five days passed the Neckar, and taken their quarters between that River and the Rhine. A considerable body is likewise come from Lauterburg to Rousheim. The second Infant Prince Herman of Baden, and Major General Vermuller, advanced with 1000 Horse, Dragoons, and 1500 Foot into the Plain of Graben, and with two Squadrons of Horse and Dragoons passed below the Mill over the Rivulet, and having from a hill hard by observed our situation and strength on that side, they retired again. We seem threatened with a Siege, but are so well provided with all things necessary, that we are not much concerned thereat. We have news here, that the Imperial Army will not hold its general Rendezvous till the 20 of the next Month. We are not so blocked up, but that we still receive frequently fresh provisions out of the neighbouring Country.

Brisac, May 7. The French Troops are now on their march from their several quarters towards Schlesstadt, where they will have a general Rendezvous about the 20 of this Month; in the mean time, the Train of Artillery is preparing here, to be conducted thither. We are told, that the Elector Palatin draws his Troops together, with design to attack the Fort which lies opposite to Philipsbourg.

Hamburg, May 10. We have been long in expectation of hearing that the siege of Stade was actually begun; and our advices of late from Lunenbourg have been still of that purpose, but hitherto the place onely remains blocked up. All our advices from Sueden continue to tell us, that the Suedes apply themselves with all the diligence possible for the halting out their fleets upon which so much depends in relation to their affairs in Pomeran, seeing they cannot transport any suc-
