MOORE'S PATENT CARRIAGES, constructed upon entire new Principles.

HIS Chaise may be seen at his Coach-yard in Bennet-street, by Stamford-street, Surrey Side of Black Friars Bridge. If the Horse in this Chaise should fall on any Road, or in going down Hill at the Rate of Ten or Twelve Miles an Hour, the Shafts and Carriage will fall with him, but the Body will not, nor can those who ride in it be thrown out, which is too often the Case with a Two Wheeled Chaise, upon the common Construction, attended with fatal Consequences.

Neither does the Horse in Mr. Moore's Chaise carry any Weight, except at the Will of the Driver, or those in the Chaise, but they may cause the Shafts to bear as much as they please upon his Back in going up Hill, and take it wholly off again in going down Hill, whereby the Traveller may greatly expedite his Journey.

This Chaise is also much more pleasant, easy, and safer from being overturned than any other Carriage ever constructed.

Pleasant, from the Height it is suspended; easy, from the Length of the Springs, and the Angle they make with the Braces; and entirely free from that disagreeable nodding Motion attendant on those Two Wheeled Carriages; safer from being overturned, as the Center of Gravity is nearer the Center, if high, than low Wheels, if the Body in both Cases hang equally high.

Besides, the Draft for the Horse is likewise in Proportion, as high Wheels have the Advantage over low: Yet, notwithstanding these Particulars in Favour of Mr. Moore's Patent Chaise, the Cost will be but a Trifle more than a Two Wheeled Chaise or Gigg upon the common Construction.

N. B. the Body of any open Chaise may, at a small Expence, be mounted upon Mr. Moore's Patent Principles.
