

Monarch and his Royal Consort, and the Safety and Prosperity of this Kingdom and Government.

We have contemplated, with the highest Gratification, that Liberality of Mind and Splendor of collected Talents, which promise such an extensive Patronage to Genius, and give an Earnest that Great Britain shall flame forth in a Blaze of cultivated Arts, as it hath hitherto been distinguished by the Glory of its Arms; and we receive a renewed Pleasure, in the Hope and Confidence that your Royal Highness's munificent Views will, if possible, have an additional Support from an Alliance with a Princess possessed of the most distinguished personal Accomplishments, mental Endowments, and exalted Virtues.

We behold, with singular Transport, the first Subject of the Realm, in the Person of your Royal Highness, quitting the Magnificence of a Palace for the Profession of Arms; and we are emulous, with the rest of His Majesty's loyal Volunteers, to imitate so illustrious an Example of Loyalty to our King and Attachment to the best of Governments, and, if necessary, to die in their Defence.

That your Royal Highness and your Royal Consort may long live to enjoy the Pleasures resulting from domestic Happiness and the unfeigned Love and Esteem of every Subject of the British Empire, is the Prayer of your Royal Highness's most humble and dutiful Servants, &c.
