Downing-Street, August 30, 1796.

THE Letters, of which the following are Copies; have been received from Colonel Craufurd by the Right Honorable Lord Grenville, His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

*Head Quarters of His Royal Highness
the Archduke Charles of Austria,
Mettingen, August 12, 1796.*

MY LORD,

I Have the Honour to inform your Lordship, that the Archduke marched on the 9th Instant with the Main Army from Nordlingen, and took a Position across the Eger Rivulet, with his Right towards Allerheim, the Center in Point of Mettingen, where the Head Quarters were fixed, and his Left towards Hohenaltheim, for the Purpose of covering more effectually the Roads from Nordlingen and Ottingen to Donawert. The Corps which had been posted at Nersheim, under General Hotze, had already fallen back to Forheim and Aufhausen, to keep up the direct Communication with that on the Left Bank of the Danube, commanded by General Riese, who was now encamped near Dillingen. General Wartenleben had moved in the mean Time to Forckheim, on the River Rednitz, and from thence to Lauf on the Pegnitz. General Frolich, the Prince of Condé, and General Wolf, remained nearly in the same Position as mentioned in my Dispatch of the 4th.

The Enemy attacked the Austrian Guards of General Hotze and Riese on the 8th; but, by a Display of much Skill and Firmness, the first of those Generals managed to lose so little Ground, that the Change of Position, which was ordered for the next Day, took Place without Interruption; and the latter, from his Situation being more advantageous, completely repulsed the Attack that was made upon him.

On the 9th at Night Information was received that the Prince of Condé had been obliged to retire to Mindenheim, on the Mindel, and General Wolf into the Defile of Bregentz, where, however, he had posted himself in such a Manner as to check the Enemy's Manœuvre in that Quarter. General Wartenleben also reported, that his Position was so bad as to make it highly imprudent for him to await the Attack which General Jourdan, from his late Movements, seemed to be meditating; and the same Day General Moreau arrived in great Force opposite the Center of His Royal Highness's extensive Line, forming with his Left on the Heights of Umenheim, his Center in Point of Catzenstein, and his Right on the Heights of Dunstelingen and Deschingen, with a Corps to cover this Flank near Laningen, on the Danube. His Reserve was between Nersheim and Korigsbron.

On the 10th the Enemy advanced a strong Part of their first Line into the Woods in their Front, where they established themselves firmly, and the same Evening, about Six o'Clock, they attacked General Hotze's Left, at Eglingen and Amerdingen, with great Impetuosity. They succeeded in driving back his Advanced Posts, but they made no Impression on his Left Position, nor did they interrupt the Attack that His Royal Highness intended to make upon them the next Morning, of which the following was the Disposition.

An Advanced Guard, commanded by Prince John of Lichtenstein, supported by a small Corps under General Staray, was to march from the Camp of Mettingen along the Road that leads from Nordlingen to Nersheim, and endeavour, by manœuvring to the Enemy's Left Flank, to dislodge them from the Heights of Umenheim. The Rest of the Main Army was to assemble at Foreheim, Aufhausen, and Amerdingen, from whence it was to march in Three Columns; that of the Right under General Hotze; that of the Center under the Prince of Furstenberg; and the Left under General de la Tour, and attack the Enemy's Center and Right, whilst General Riese, strengthened by Part of General Frolich's Corps, drove them from the Neighbourhood of Laningen, and and marched towards Giengen and Haydenheim, in order to come into the Rear of General Moreau's Position. This latter Movement was to be covered on it's Right by a small intermediate Corps under General Mercantin, who was to preserve the Communication between General Riese and the Main Army. As the Enemy had a great Superiority of Numbers, it was resolved to attack by Surprise, and for this Purpose the Marches were so arranged, that the Columns were to be formed on the different Points, from whence they were to advance, just before Day-Break, and proceed immediately. However, a most violent Storm, which lasted several Hours, made the Night so extremely dark, and the Roads so bad, that the Troops and Artillery were above double the Time they otherwise would have been in performing their Movements, and therefore the Attack was necessarily deferred till Seven o'Clock. This enabled the Enemy to discover the whole Plan, and prepare for their Defence.

Notwithstanding so unfortunate a Circumstance, which deprived the Archduke of the great Advantage of Surprise, His Royal Highness persevered in his Resolution. The Three Columns of the Center were successful in dislodging the Enemy's Advanced Guard from the Woods, and they drove it back to the Heights of the principal Position; but the Column that marched towards Umenheim finding itself taken in Flank by General Moreau's Reserve, which had advanced for that Purpose as soon as the Affair commenced, was obliged to retire. This laid General Hotze's Right Flank open, and forced him also to fall back to the Position of Foreheim, from whence he had marched in the Morning; but the Prince of Furstenberg and General La Tour maintained their Advantages. Just as the Archduke was making his Dispositions for strengthening and bringing forward his Right again, he received a Report from General Wartensleben, purporting that he was obliged to retire to Amberg; and that a Column of General Jourdan's Army had already arrived at Nuremberg, for the Purpose of co-operating immediately with General Moreau. His Royal Highness now judged, that even if victorious on this Point he would probably still be obliged to retreat to Donawert, by the Movements that the Enemy were making on his Right, and, should he be so unfortunate as to experience a Defeat, the Consequences from the same Reason, might be most disastrous. He therefore suspended his Attack, and contented himself with remaining Master of the principal Part of the Field of Battle; a Decision however taken with the utmost Reluctance, because General Riese had succeeded to the Extent of his most sanguine Hopes, and had advanced, about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, nearly to Haydenheim.

The Austrians lost on this Occasion from 12 to 1500 Men. The French Loss in killed and wounded is estimated at above 2500, besides more than 1200 Prisoners are already brought in, Four Pieces of Cannon, and several Ammunition Waggons.

This Morning the whole Army of His Royal Highness has taken exactly the same Position that it had on the 10th.

I have the Honor to be, &c.

Head Quarters of His Royal Highness
 the Archduke Charles of Austria,
 Donawert, August 14, 1796.

MY LORD.

I Have the Honour to inform your Lordship, that the Archduke marched with his Main Army to this Place on the 13th, where he was joined by Generals Hotze and Riese. The Enemy did not attempt to interrupt this Movement, though it was made in the Day, nor have they advanced since, which is a convincing Proof that the Affair of the 11th checked very materially their intended Plan of Operations.

The Pass of Bregentz continues to be defended by General Wolf, and that of Freussen will be covered by General La Tour's Left.

I have the Honor to be, &c.

C. CRAUFURD.
