Downing-Street, December 25, 1810.

A DISPATCH, of which the following is a Copy, was received last Night at the Office of the Earl of Liverpool from Lieutenant-General Viscount Wellington; dated Cartaxo, December 8, 1810.

My Lord,
THE Detachment of the Enemy's Troops commanded by General Gardanne, which had returned to Sobreira Formosa, have continued their March to the Frontier, and by the last Accounts had entered Spain.

I have not heard that this Detachment had any Communication with the Enemy's Troops on the Left of the Zezere, from whom they were distant about Three Leagues. I understand that, having lost some Prisoners taken by a Patrole and by a Party of the Ordenanza which accompanied the Honourable Lieutenant-Colonel Ponsonby on a Reconnoissance from Abrantes to the River Codes, they made very particular Enquiries respecting the Position of Lieutenant-General Hill's Corps, and the Means which the Allies possessed of crossing the Tagus at Abrantes; and, having commenced their March from Cardigos towards the Codes in the Morning, they retired about Eleven with great Precipitation, and continued their Retreat in the same Manner till they reached the Frontier.

They were followed by the Ordenanza, who did them much Mischief on the March, and took much Baggage from them. The Enemy destroyed many Horses and Mules which could not keep up with them; and this March, if it was ordered by superior Authority, and is connected with any other Arrangement, had every Appearance, and was attended by all the Consequences, of a precipitate and forced Retreat.

No Alteration of any Importance has been made in the Position of the Enemy's Troops since I addressed your Lordship.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WELLINGTON.

Lord Chamberlain's Office, December 24, 1810.
