which I have received from all quarters, I can have no doubt that his intention is to join the grand French army, and to move either against the right of the Prince Royal of Sweden, or upon the rear of the grand army of the allies on the left bank of the Elbe. I am confirmed in this opinion by the separation of the Danish and French troops, the latter of which have moved upon Ratzeburg, and the former upon Lubeck; under this impression I shall pass the Elbe as soon as the enemy shall have passed the Steignitz, and I shall be certain of his intentions. The news which I have just received from the Head-quarters of the Prince Royal of Sweden, confirm me in the idea, that Marshal Davoust is marching to the assistance of the grand French army.

The position which the troops under my orders have occupied, has not only prevented the enemy from effecting the conquest of Mecklenburgh, but has rendered it impossible for him to attack us, and, far from having obtained the least advantage, he has been daily harassed and engaged on all sides with our light troops, and has suffered a loss of several hundred prisoners. On his retreat to Schonberg and Ratzeburgh, we have taken more than five hundred.

I hope by passing the Elbe at Domitz, either to arrest the march of Marshal Davoust, or to find an opportunity of attacking him with advantage.
