Foreign-Office, October 22, 1813.

DISPATCHES, of which the following are copies, have been received by Viscount Castlereagh, His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, from His Excellency General Viscount Cathcart, K. T. and from Lieutenant-General the Honourable Sir Charles Stewart, K. B.

MY LORD, Prague, September 21, 1813.

THE Austrian troops that formed the advance of General Kleinau's corps, under the immediate command of General Scheither, have entered Freyberg, where they surprised and made prisoners four hundred of the enemy, with their General Brunnau. It is a singular and pleasing circumstance that two of the remaining squadrons of the Westphalian hussars, which did not come over from the enemy with their two regiments (being on detachment), formed a part of the prisoners taken.

An Austrian corps has also advanced towards Chemnitz.

On the 19th, the enemy remained in position at Peterswalde; Buonaparte slept at Pirna. On the 20th they retired still further towards Dresden, and withdrew also from Nollendorf. The Prussian corps, under General Zeithen, immediately followed them.

An order has been intercepted from Marshal Berthier to General Laubau, commanding the advanced troops of the enemy, which directs him to make all his dispositions for retreat on Dresden.

All accounts agree in stating the extreme distress of the French army in the mountains: they are losing numbers of their horses daily, and their troops are in the greatest want of provisions.

It is probable that Buonaparte will remain à cheval on the Elbe as long as possible, as the idea of a retreat, from recent recollections, cannot be very agreeable to him.

General Bennigsen's army is expected to arrive in five or six days by the pass of Zittau.

I enclose your Lordship the two last official bulletins.

I have the honour to be, &c.

Lieutenant-General.

Imperial Head-Quarters, Töplitz,
September 25, 1813.

MY LORD,

MY last dispatch contained details of the movements and positions of this army to the 12th instant. Your Lordship will see that Buonaparte has endeavoured to oppose sufficient portions of his force to the Prince Royal of Sweden, and to General Blücher; and that he has harassed and disunited his army in giving effect to that intention, and in occasionally reinforcing and reducing the forces so employed; but his attention has been principally directed to this army; and there seems now to be clear evidence, from his operations, as well as from intercepted papers, that his plan was to move into Bohemia, and to strike at Prague, establishing himself on the line of supply and communication of this army.

Vandamme's orders were to push on towards Prague, and he had positive assurance that a very large force was immediately to follow him; and he was so much convinced of Buonaparte's intention, that when the Prussians were in sight in his rear, on the 30th ultimo, at Nollendorf, it was impossible for his Generals to convince him that it was not a French column. It also appears that troops did move to support him, but were counter-manded, and the officers sent to inform him were killed.

Much as the territory within the command of Dresden has been narrowed by the advance of General Blücher and General Tauenzien, Napoleon has clung to that vicinage, and particularly to the defiles leading to this place. He has sent off as many useless mouths as possible, and has concentrated his force: and as it would be dangerous for either army to pass these defiles, especially in the state in which the incessant rains have placed them, in presence of the other, the operations have been reduced to affairs of posts in the mountains, vexatious enough to the troops, but not conducive to great and immediate results; though highly honourable to the arms of the Allies.

The Emperor Alexander has removed the difficulty, by bringing forward General Bennigsen's army, and ordering it to be replaced by a new army from the Russian frontier.

This great measure will at once render all the armies moveable.

General Bennigsen, moving into Bohemia by his left, is rapidly advancing to this position, and with the preparation always meant to be stationary here, will effectually cover Bohemia, and thereby set this army at full liberty to move also by its left, by good, or at least passable roads, and within reach of its supplies, while the navigation of the Upper Elbe and Moldau will feed General Bennigsen's army.

The conduct of General Blücher has been most masterly. Whenever it was practicable he has fought and beat the enemy; and when the latter turned upon him in force, he has fallen back, and drawn him to the Silesian frontier. He is now between Bautzen and Dresden, operating to the very gates of the city. His right is in communication with General Tauenzien, and his left with General Bubna, while his Cossacks pass the Elbe, communicate with this army, and give the enemy great annoyance.

General Bubna has his right towards Schandau, and his line extends along the Bohemian frontier.

The Prince of Sweden covers Berlin, and strives to gain possession of Wittenberg and the Tête-de-Pont of Torgau, but his light troops have crossed at Rossau, and his Royal Highness's preparation to pass at that place, is a constant menace to Leipzig.

General Kleinau, on the Commotau and Marienberg roads, and Generals Greenville and Prince Maurice Lichtenstein, in the defiles to the eastward of that passage, send parties into Saxony, which every day cut off corps, and interrupt communication.

Count Platoff the Hetman, is himself gone into Saxony with some regiments of his Cossacks, so that the whole country on the rivers Saale and Mulda, and between them and the Elbe, is covered with detachments of light troops.

On the 12th the enemy having established himself in force on the heights of Nollendorf and Graupen, saw the feu de joie for the victory of Dannevitze. On the 14th the Prince Schwarzenberg ordered a strong reconnoissance from all points of the line.

The enemy was driven from Nollendorf and its environs through Peterswalde, to the heights above Breitenau and Gieshübel, with the loss of many men and horses killed and taken.

The Emperor Alexander went in person beyond Hellendorf. The advanced posts of the Allies remained that night at Hellendorf, Peterswalde and Schönwalde.

These posts were gradually drawn nearer to Nollendorf, in the course of the two following days, and on the 16th, the enemy having attacked them in force, there was a great deal of sharp skirmishing between Peterswalde and Nollendorf, in the course of which General Blücher's son, Colonel Blücher, was wounded and made prisoner.

On the evening of the 16th, the advanced posts were again where they had been on the 12th.

On the 17th, the enemy endeavoured to extend at the mouth of the defile leading from Nollendorf to Culm, and the troops having been ordered to retire gradually towards the latter place, where the line had been strongly reinforced, a cannonade took place in front of Culm, and many of the enemy were killed and wounded.

The Field-Marshal having previously occupied Aussig, in the course of that morning, directed General Count Mehrfeldt to advance from thence, and take post on the heights towards Nollendorf with part of his division.

In the evening Count Wittgenstein was ordered to drive back the enemy from before Culm, and at the same time flank attacks were made by Count Mehrfeldt and Colloredo, on the masses assembled at Nollendorf, which were put to flight with great loss, which would have been still greater, had not the darkness of the night and a thick fog favoured their escape. One general, seven cannon, and upwards of two thousand prisoners were taken by the Austrians in this affair, besides what had fallen into the hands of the Russians and Prussians.

Prisoners say that Buonaparte was present, and that he had a horse wounded under him.

As the enemy continued in the mountain on the 18th, it was thought his intention might be to attempt to descend into the plain, and every disposition was made for his reception; but he retired in the night, and morning of the following day, followed by the Allies, and the advanced posts are again at the same places where they were on the 14th.

After the reconnoissance, a vessel having been prepared with combustible matter, by a Russian officer of engineers, and manned by a detachment of Russian guards, on the 22d or 23d, succeeded in burning the bridge which the enemy had established under the cover of the fortress of Lilienstein. They have however still a bridge at Pirna.

I have the honour to be, &c.

(Signed) CATHCART.

Viscount Castlereagh, &c. &c. &c.

P. S. The latest reports state that the enemy have removed to Dresden, and from thence have reinforced the corps opposed to General Blücher.

MY LORD, Töplitz, September 29, 1813.

BEING sufficiently recovered, I returned to the Imperial head-quarters at Töplitz, on the 27th instant. No very important military event has occurred since my dispatch of the 21st. The general reports and information is as follows:

Buonaparte arrived at Hartha, near Bisshoffswerde, on the 23d. It appears he meditated some attempts on General Blücher, but finding that officer not only prepared for him, but actually making preparations to act offensively, Buonaparte seems to have retired, with some loss, towards Dresden, where by the last accounts the old guards were still stationed, with various depôts of regiments. The enemy are still working at the place, the redoubt at the Pirna entrance is demolished, but new ones are erected at those of Falken, Freyberg, and another. Provisions are very scarce in the town. To add to the distresses in the place, two magazines of hay and oats were burnt down, one to the value of thirty thousand rix-dollars, and the other of above forty thousand.

All accounts agree in stating that the generality of the troops that have measured back their steps across the Elbe, are in a miserable condition.

Count Bubna attacked the enemy's troops near Stolpen, the castle of which the enemy blew up, and retired from; the Austrians had some loss.

The allied army, in consequence of the arrival yesterday of General Bennigsen, is about to be put in motion. The whole of General Bennigsen's corps is not expected in the position here until the 3d or 4th of October.

I have the honour to be, &c.

Lieutenant-General.

Viscount Castlereagh, &c. &c. &c.

P. S. Prince Schwartzberg has just received a report, that a joint attack was made by Platoff and Thieleman on the enemy at Altenberg, near Leipzig, when two thousand prisoners were made. The first regiment of hussars got off, but it is supposed will still be taken: official details are not yet received.

First Supplement Extraordinary to the Imperial and Royal Privileged Prague Post Office Gazette.

[Referred to in Sir C. Stewart's Dispatch of the 21st Sept.]

Töplitz, September 19, 1813.

THE Imperial and Royal Major-General Baron Scheither has executed the order of marching to Freyberg, with that skill and valour which are peculiar to him, and which are generally acknowledged. On the 17th in the evening, he, without attracting notice, established himself near Bertsdorf, in the vicinity of Freyberg, and thus, on the 18th in the morning, appeared unexpectedly before the town. The enemy had blocked it up, and had occupied all the gates with infantry.

General Scheither ordered several detachments to advance, by circuitous routes, against the gates of Meissen and Dohna, while he himself led the chief column against the gate of Erbsdorf. The enemy defended themselves obstinately; the gate of Erbsdorf was at length forced, some detachments of horse galloped immediately into the town, and after a short resistance, made the garrison prisoners.

The General of Brigade Bruno, twenty officers of the staff, and others of rank, four hundred mounted hussars, and two hundred and twenty eight infantry, fell into our hands.

Our whole loss consists in one man killed, and three wounded jägers.

General Scheither extolls the distinguished conduct of his troops of all descriptions. He particularly mentions the seventh battalion of jägers. Colonel Von Vayder and the First Lieutenant Angermayer, of this battalion, Captain Devaux, and Waesthoff, of the regiment of Vincent light horse, and the First Lieutenant Martini, of the general staff, have especially behaved with great bravery.

Second Supplement Extraordinary to the Prague Post-Office Gazette.

Head-Quarters, Töplitz, September 19, 1813.

OF the engagement on the 17th instant, which redounded so much to the honour of the allied arms, the following particulars remain yet to be recorded.

Buonaparte had united to the 1st, 2d, and 14th corps d'armée, a great part of those troops which were left him out of the sanguinary and disastrous battles fought with General Blücher and with the Crown Prince of Sweden, and had, at the head of his guards, advanced as far as Nollendorf. That all his views were directed to the object of gaining ground, and of pushing forward on the road of Nollendorf as far as possible, could easily be inferred from the impetuosity with which the movement of his troops was executed against Arbesan, Kninitz, Tellisch, and Porsdorf. The cavalry of the French guards attacked our batteries with great resolution, while the French infantry kept up, on all sides, a murderous fire. Buonaparte is said to have been in the midst of the columns, and, according to the information of the prisoners, a horse was wounded under him.

Owing to the dispositions made in the allied army, and to the bravery with which the troops of all descriptions executed them, the plans of Buonaparte were again frustrated, and his army were dislodged from all the positions which they had gained in the plain, and were driven back upon the heights of Nollendorf in dreadful confusion.

His Imperial Highness the Grand Duke Constantine was, during the battle, in the van guard, and in the midst of the greatest shower of musket balls.

The Generals Count of Wittgenstein, and the Duke of Würtemberg, Field-Marshal Count of Merveld and Colloredo, General Ziethen, Field-Marshal Lieutenant Prince Aloysius Lichtenstein, Lieutenant-Colonels Simony, Loschi, and Csorits, which latter found an opportunity of being very active in the very beginning of the battle; Major Lewis Geppert and Captain Dory have particularly distinguished themselves on this day.

His Imperial Majesty of Russia sent, as early as on the evening after the battle, the Military Order of St. George of the Third Class to Field-Marshal Count Colloredo, and a gold sword of honour, ornamented with an inscription in brilliants, to Field-Marshal Lieutenant Prince Aloysius Lichtenstein.

All the troops of the three allied armies have again, in fraternal concord, animated by one and the same spirit, and with laudable emulation, fought for the success of the great common cause.

Yesterday every thing remained quiet, and up to ten o'clock this morning the enemy has not made any further demonstration.

According to the French bulletins, the French army is victorious at all points, and is advancing. In point of fact they have, for the most part, been compelled to abandon the right bank of the Elbe; and the attempt, already thrice repeated, of penetrating into Bohemia, has every time had no other effect than the discomfiture and destruction of the troops employed.

All accounts agree in stating, that the French army in the Saxon Erzgebirge is a prey to the most dreadful privations; that they daily, from want of forage, lose hundreds of horses; and that the men, to satisfy the cravings of hunger, are obliged to have recourse to horse flesh.

Extract of Letter from Rear-Admiral Freemantle, to John Wilson Croker, Esq. dated on board His Majesty's Ship Milford, off Fiume, the 4th September, 1813.

I HAVE the honour of informing you, for the information of the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that I anchored here with the Milford, Eagle, and Havannah, on the 26th ultimo; and that the Austrian troops marched into the town on the same day.

Nothing can be more gratifying, than the communications I have had with General Nugent. The Croats desert every day from the enemy, and I consider that Dalmatia is nearly cut off. General Radiovoich is at Carlstadt, and the advanced post of General Nugent, is at Lippa.

It appears the French have provisioned the citadel of Trieste.

Admiralty-Office, October 23, 1813.

Copy of a Letter from Commodore Sir James Lucas Yeo, to John Wilson Croker, Esq. dated on board His Majesty's Ship Wolfe, at Kingston, Upper Canada, the 29th June, 1813.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to inform you, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that on the 3d inst. I sailed with His Majesty's squadron, under my command, from this port, to co-operate with our army at the head of the Lake, and annoy the enemy, by intercepting all supplies going to the army, and thereby oblige his squadron to come out for its protection.

At day-light, on the 8th, the enemy's camp was discovered close to us at Forty Mile Creek; it being calm, the large vessels could not get in; but the Beresford, Captain Spilsbury, the Sir Sidney Smith, Lieutenant Majoribanks, and the gun-boats, under the orders of Lieutenant Anthony, (first of this ship) succeeded in getting close under the enemy's batteries, and by a sharp and well directed fire, soon obliged him to make a precipitate retreat, leaving all his camp equipage, provisions, stores, &c. behind, which fell into our hands; the Beresford also captured all his bateaux, laden with stores, &c. Our troops immediately occupied the post. I then proceeded along shore to the westward of the enemy's camp, leaving our army in his front. On the 13th we captured two schooners and some boats, going to the enemy with supplies; by them I received information, that there was a depôt of provisions at Genessee River; I accordingly proceeded off that river, landed some seamen and marines of the squadron, and brought off all the provisions found in the Government stores, as also a sloop laden with grain, for the army; on the 19th I anchored off the Great Sodus, landed a party of the 1st regiment of Royal Scots, and took off six hundred barrels of flour and pork, which had arrived there for their army.

I have, &c.

(Signed) JAMES LUCAS YEO,
Commodore.

Admiralty-Office, October 23, 1813.

Copy of a Letter from Commodore Sir James Lucas Yeo, addressed to Admiral Sir John Borlase Warren, Bart. and K. B. and a duplicate of which has been transmitted by the former, to John Wilson Croker, Esq.

His Majesty's Ship Wolfe, on Lake Ontario, Aug. 10, 1813.

STR,

I HAVE the honour to inform you, that the enemy's squadron was discovered at anchor off fort Niagara, on the morning of the 8th inst. consisting of thirteen sail; that of His Majesty of six. They immediately weighed, and stood out in a line of battle, but on our approaching nearly within gun-shot, they fired their broadsides, wore, and stood under their batteries: light airs and calms prevented me closing with them again until this night, when having a fine breeze we stood for them.

At eleven we came within gun-shot of their line of schooners, who opened a heavy fire, their ships keeping off the wind to prevent our closing; at half past twelve, this ship came within gun-shot of the Pike and Madison, when they immediately bore up, fired their stern chase guns, and made sail for Niagara, leaving two of their schooners astern, which we captured; the Growler and Julia, each mounting one long thirty-two, and one long twelve, and forty men.

From information obtained from the prisoners, I hear that their new ship, the General Pike, mounts twenty-eight long twenty-four pounders, and four hundred men; and that all their schooners mount from two to four long thirty-two pounders.

The enemy have disappeared, I therefore suppose they are gone to Sacket's harbour to refit.

I am happy to add, that (except in the sails and rigging) His Majesty's squadron have not sustained any injury; and have the honour to be,

Sir, your most obedient Servant,

JAMES LUCAS YEO, Commodore.
