Admiralty-Office, March 15, 1814.

ADMIRAL Lord Keith has transmitted to John Wilson Croker, Esq. a letter from Rear-Admiral Penrose, dated on board His Majesty's ship Porcupine, off the Bar of the Adour, the 25th of February, stating that the boats and small vessels destined to assist the operations of the army under the Marquess of Wellington, succeeded in crossing the Bar of the above river on the preceding day.

A breeze, which sprung up in the night of the 23d, was the first that had offered itself, since the necessary preparations had been in forwardness, to enable the vessels to reach the mouth of the Adour; and early on the following morning the Rear-Admiral was off the Bar with the vessels and boats collected for the service.

The boats of the vessels of war, with two flat boats, were sent directly to the Bar to endeavour to find a passage through the surf, the British troops being at that time seen from the ships crossing over to the north side of the river, but greatly in want of the boats intended for their assistance.

Captain O'Reilly, in a Spanish-built boat, selected as the most safe for the service, and having with him the principal pilot, was overset in his attempt to enter, but escaped on shore. Lieutenant Debenham, in a six-oared cutter, succeeded in reaching the beach; the other boats returned to wait the result of the next tide, it being scarcely possible that one in fifty could then have crossed.

A pilot was sent to land to the south-west of the river, and walk from thence to the Adour, in order to make a concerted signal from within the Bar, to guide the vessels through the safest parts. Without the Bar there appeared no interval; a long and heavy line of surf alone presenting itself. Rewards were offered to the leading vessel, the second, third, &c.

Lieutenant Collins, Flag-Lieutenant to Rear-Admiral Penrose, was dispatched also to endeavour to land, and walk to the army; and the Rear-Admiral was informed, about that time, by Sir John Hope, of the progress made by the troops, and the great utility of which the boats would prove, if they could join.

The tide being at length at a proper height, and all the vessels well up for the attempt, several drew near the Bar, but hauled off again, till at last Lieutenant Cheyne (of the Woodlark sloop), in a Spanish boat with five British seamen, crossed the surf and ran up the river. The next was a prize boat, manned from a transport, closely followed by a gun boat, commanded by Lieutenant Chessbyre, who was the first that has hoisted the British colours in the Adour.

The rest of the boats and vessels followed in rapid succession, and with extraordinary success: the zeal and science of the officers triumphing over all the difficulties of the navigation.

The Rear-Admiral was not yet enabled to transmit a return of the casualties: it was hoped from the nearness of the shore that they would fall mostly on the vessels.

Whitehall, March 15, 1814.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent has been pleased, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to grant unto the Reverend Christopher Bethell, Master of Arts, the place and dignity of Dean of the cathedral church of Chichester, void by the death of the Reverend Combe Miller.
