THE following Addresses, having been transmitted to Viscount Sidmouth, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by the several persons whose names are respectively subjoined to each Address, were presented by His Lordship to His Majesty, who was pleased to receive the same very graciously:

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Address of the Provost, Fellows, and Scholars of the College of the Holy and Undivided Trinity of Queen Elizabeth, near Dublin.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Provost, Fellows, and Scholars of the College of the Holy and Undivided Trinity of Queen Elizabeth, near Dublin, most humbly approach the Throne with renewed declarations of our devoted attachment to your Majesty's Person and Government.

We have seen with regret and detestation the efforts used, in the very bosom of the empire, by insidious and profligate men, to excite a spirit of hostility to the long-venerated establishments of the realm, and to weaken the affection which attaches every virtuous subject to the person of his Sovereign.

Deeply grateful for the many blessings which we enjoy under your Majesty's mild and paternal Government, we cannot repress our indignation at the attempts of irreligion and treason to destroy the obligations of law, to revile the administration of justice, and to dissolve every moral sanction which sustains and guards society.

But we are not dismayed by these dangers.

We trust a spirit is arising in the country which will successfully counteract these designs, that menace at once the best interests of social life and the dearest hopes of humanity. We humbly yet confidently hope, that the same gracious Providence which has hitherto guarded the safety of this realm, will defeat every attempt to impair our happy Constitution, under which we have so long enjoyed advantages unparalleled in the history of the world.

Removed, by our peculiar duties and pursuits, from interference in the ordinary occurrences of political life, we should, nevertheless, feel ourselves deficient in gratitude as well as allegiance, if, at a crisis like the present, we should neglect to express to your Majesty those sentiments of respect and attachment by which our Body has ever been, and we trust ever shall be distinguished.

We beg leave, in all humility, to add, that it shall be our most anxious care to inspire the youth committed to our charge with the highest estimation of those national benefits which they inherit from their ancestors, and with an ardent desire to transmit them unimpaired to posterity.

Trinity College, Dublin, December 22, 1820.

[Transmitted by His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.]

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Address of the Sovereign, Burgesses, and Freemen of the City of Armagh.

WE, the Sovereign, Burgesses, and Freemen of the City of Armagh, beg leave to approach your Majesty, in this season of public agitation, with an assurance of our most devoted attachment to the sacred Person of your Majesty, and to the Constitution of the Government of these countries.

We can never forget that, to your wise and vigorous administration of the resources of the empire we have, under the Divine Providence, been indebted for the glorious issue of the great struggle in which we had been long engaged for the independence of Europe, with the violence of a revolutionary nation wielded as it was by a military despotism.

We regard with astonishment and indignation the conduct of those who are labouring to disparage and degrade a Constitution, which other nations are at this very time vainly endeavouring to imitate, as their only expedient for raising themselves to political dignity and prosperity. But though we are shocked by the profligate and audacious impiety, which in this country of freedom and forbearance has found an opportunity of obtruding itself on the notice of the public; we derive consolation from observing
