THE following Addresses have been presented to the King; which Addresses His Majesty was pleased to receive very graciously:

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty,
Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, your Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the Master, Wardens and Brethren of the Corporation of Cooks and Vintners of the City of Dublin, presume to approach the Throne with a declaration of unfeigned devotion to your Majesty's Person, and to the happy form of Government under which this empire has attained its present towering height of prosperity and glory.

In ordinary times, we should deem it, if not insulting, at least unnecessary to call upon any of the Corporations of a City so famed for loyalty as Dublin, to come forward and testify their allegiance. But at a crisis when revolutionary and blasphemous doctrines are circulated with restless activity amongst our fellow-subjects of Great Britain, by a disaffected and desperate faction, intent upon sapping all our civil and religious institutions, and leaving even the Monarchy but a name, we feel it an imperative duty to rally round the Altar and the Throne to proclaim our abhorrence of those agitating perturbed spirits, to declare our firm determination to stem the progress of infidelity and treason, and to renew our assurances of inflexible attachment to our mild and beneficent Sovereign, and to our inimitable Constitution, the happy source of our well tempered liberty and the admiration of the civilized world.

We beg to assure your Majesty that such pestilential doctrines have but few advocates in Ireland, and that in approaching the pure and untainted shores of our island, they lose their virulent quality, and innocuously expire.

With the characteristic zeal and loyalty of our country, we unite with every well affected subject in fervently praying that our beloved King, rising above the malignant machinations of infidels and revolutionists, and emulating the magnanimity and numerous virtues of his excellent Father, may long continue to reign in the hearts of a prosperous, free, and contented people.

Arthur Morrison, Master; Simon Hatch and George Campbell, Wardens.

[Presented by the Lord Mayor of Dublin, accompanied by Alderman Darley.]

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty,
Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, the Master, Wardens, and Brethren of the Corporation of Taylors, the most ancient of the Chartered Guilds, and second to none in loyalty and attachment to your Majesty's Person and Government, at this important crisis humbly approach your Majesty to declare our unshaken attachment to our glorious Constitution in Church and State, and to those principles that first placed, and which we trust shall ever support your illustrious House upon the Throne of these realms.

As the august supporter of the Protestant Religion, alike removed from intolerance, bigotry, and superstition on the one side, as it is from scepticism, deism, and infidelity on the other, we most humbly hope that the moral, just, and conscientious principles which have so long supported your Majesty's Ancestors, shall still support and be supported by every branch of your Majesty's illustrious House.

We deeply lament that the peace you have been instrumental, under Divine Providence, of establishing throughout Europe, should be disturbed at home by men of desperate and dissatisfied minds, who, having not even character to lose, would wound that peace they only want the power to destroy; but we sincerely trust that the Almighty arm, which upheld this favoured empire when the whole continent was convulsed, will bring good out of this evil, by manifesting to your Majesty how sincerely you are beloved, and how deservedly esteemed in the affection of your people. We beg to assure your Majesty we most ardently participate in those expressions of duty and attachment, which we are proud to say are not our sentiments only, but the sentiments of every good and loyal heart throughout this part of your dominions, where we
