A LETTER, of which the following is a copy, has been this day received at Earl Bathurst's Office from Major Chisholm, addressed to R. Wilmot Horton, Esq. dated Cape Coast Castle, 23d February 1824:

SIR,

IT is with infinite sorrow I acquaint you, for the information of Earl Bathurst, that since I had the honour of addressing you on the 3d instant, on the subject of the engagement which took place near Assamacow, in the Western Wassaw country, on the 21st ultimo, between a division of His Majesty's troops and native allies, under the immediate command of Sir Charles M'Carthy, and an army of Ashantees, I have ascertained that His Excellency was severely wounded, taken prisoner, and immediately put to death by the barbarous enemy.

I am concerned to state that of eleven Officers of the regulars and militia, who belonged to His Excellency's division, two only have returned here Mr. J. T. Williams, Secretary, and another gentleman are said to be prisoners, and it is understood that the other seven were killed, either in the action or after they were taken prisoners.

It was my intention to have reported in detail by the present conveyance, but the state of my health prevents my doing so

My medical attendant gives me reason to hope that I shall be sufficiently recovered in seven or eight days to write, and as I deem it of the utmost importance to put His Lordship in possession of a perfect knowledge of the state of affairs in this quarter, I purpose sending the Officer next in seniority to myself (Captain Laing, of the Royal African Colonial Corps) with my official dispatches.

The extensive knowledge of the African character possessed by this gentleman, his uninterrupted intercourse with our principal allies, since the commencement of hostilities, together with his general experience, qualify him well to afford his Lordship any information which my letters may fail to convey.

The Ashantees, said to be fifteen thousand strong, have continued at Assamacow since the action of the 21st; but it is rumoured that they are making preparations for advancing on Monday next the 1st of March.

All the force I have been able to collect does not exceed six thousand muskets, and as I do not consider it prudent to hazard a general engagement, I have determined on taking up positions on the bank of the River Boosom-pra, to dispute the passage of the enemy, and I am sanguine in my hopes that the measure will be attended with success.

The natives of an extensive village in the vicinity of Succondee, having fired on the boats of one of His Majesty's ships, disarmed several of our soldiers who were wounded in the late action, and were endeavouring to effect their escape from the Ashantees; and having moreover destroyed Succondee, it was thought necessary by the senior naval Officer and myself to attack it, and a force of one thousand two hundred men was accordingly embarked on board the squadron, and the place was taken possession of on the 17th instant without any opposition, and immediately set on fire.

I have, &c.

and Major Comdg. the Troops.

Downing-Street, June 17, 1824.

CAPTAIN LAING, of the Royal African Colonial Corps, arrived this morning at Earl Bathurst's Office, with a dispatch from Major Chisholm, addressed to R. Wilmot Horton, Esq. under date of

Cape Coast Castle, the 16th of March 1824, of which the following is an extract :

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you for the information of Earl Bathurst, since I addressed you on the 23d ultimo, that the Ashantee army in the Western Wassaw country has remained stationary at Assamakow.

In transmitting a copy of a report of the particulars of the action of the 21st of January, made to me by Captain Ricketts, of the 2d West India Regiment, and Brigade-Major to the Forces, and Second in Command on that day, I deem it an act of justice to that Officer to state that the late Sir Charles M'Carthy entertained a very high opinion of his zeal and merits, and that he had it in contemplation to bring his services to the favourable notice of His Lordship: and also, that for the period of two years Captain Ricketts served under me (at the time commanding the 2d West India Regiment) in the capacities of Adjutant and Captain, I have pleasure in stating that I had every reason to be satisfied with his conduct: my protracted illness having incapacitated me from attending to the public duties, the charge in a great measure fell upon him as second in command, of which he acquitted himself entirely to my satisfaction.

As his report is confined to the operations of that division of the force under the immediate command of the late Sir Charles M'Carthy, I deem it necessary to say a few words upon the movements of the others, and also to state, as far as came to my knowledge, the plans and intentions of His Excellency.

The rapid approach of the enemy having been reported to Sir Charles M'Carthy, by some of the allied Chiefs, about Christmas, preparations were immediately made for concentrating the regulars, the Cape Coast militia, and the unorganized part of the inhabitants of the town, together with some few of the neighbouring Chiefs at Djuquah, distant from Cape Coast about eighteen miles.

His Excellency proceeded there in person, leaving me for a few days at the Castle, to make some necessary arrangements previously to my departure.

A force of nearly two thousand men having been collected by the 4th of January, a movement to Ampensasoo (the head quarters of Annimelli, the King of Wassaw), on the left bank of the River Boosom-pra, was determined upon, and I was accordingly ordered to join by that day.

The impossibility of procuring provisions and shelter for the men on the route, rendered it necessary to advance in small parties, which circumstance, and the impossibility of procuring carriers for the ammunition and provisions, retarded for some days the departure of His Excellency from the camp. On the 8th of January, accounts were received of the entrance of the enemy into Western Wassaw, and that the allied forces were precipitately retreating before them; this information decided the immediate departure of Sir Charles for their camp, on the right bank of the river, with such part of the force as had not already marched for Ampensasoo, and he directed me to proceed to assume the command of the latter place, signifying it to be his intention to send me instructions how to act on his ascertaining the state of affairs in Wassaw.

I had daily communications from His Excellency from the time of his leaving Djuquah (viz. on the 9th), until the 16th, but the contents were chiefly comments upon the advance of his division, and the feeling of our allies towards us in the country passed through.

I received on the 22d two letters, one written at five A. M. on the 21st, the other the 17th, the former arriving first at seven o'clock P. M., that of the 17th about two hours later; the contents were most pressing orders for me to form an immediate junction.

The letter of the 17th having been unfortunately entrusted to a man unacquainted with the country, was delayed three days longer on the way than necessary, from which delay, and the urgent nature of His Excellency's commands to join, I was induced to fear that our consequent non-arrival, according to his reasonable expectations, would seriously derange his plans. I was determined, therefore, to proceed by a shorter, but unfrequented and consequently bad path; and having to cross the River Boosom-pra, at a distance of five miles from Ampensasoo (on the 23d), in a simple canoe, the whole day was consumed in passing my party, and I was, therefore, under the necessity of halting for the night at a village on the opposite bank. I here received the first intimation of an engagement having taken place, but could ascertain nothing of the result.

After prosecuting (on the 24th), a march of twenty-one miles, and having, at its termination, to cross the river again, without a single canoe, or any means for conveyance over, we were obliged to construct rafts for such of the party that could not swim, and to float over the ammunition, &c. in consequence of which, from the frail materials used in their construction, I am sorry to say a great deal of ammunition was lost and damaged.

On crossing the river we heard that Brigade-Major Ricketts was laying wounded in the adjoining village. On seeing and ascertaining from him the disastrous issue of the action of the 21st, and also that the small party I commanded was totally unable to cope with the enemy, or afford any assistance to the party of the late Sir Charles M'Carthy, from their complete dispersal, and knowing the hostile feeling entertained by the inhabitants of Elmina towards us, and being also apprehensive that the Ashantees, flushed with their recent victory, would advance upon Cape Coast Castle by rapid marches, I determined upon retiring on it. I regret exceedingly to state, that Captain John L'Estrange, of the Royal African Colonial Corps, died on the march, from excessive fatigue, and that all the Officers of the party and nearly the whole of the men, were laid up on their arrival at Cape Coast, from the effects of the fatigue and privations undergone by them, and I am sorry to say of the former all, except two, continue still invalids, and of the latter numbers have died.

The most numerous body of our force was encamped at a place called Yancoomassie, in the Fantee country. It consisted of the men of that nation, of a few regulars, of the Annamaboe militia, and of some unorganized natives of that town, the whole under the command of Captain Alexander Gordon Laing, of the Royal African Corps.

His Excellency having issued orders to Captain Laing to advance and menace the Assin country, with a view of bringing them over to our cause; he had accordingly proceeded about thirty miles, when reports reached him from the Officer in temporary command at Cape Coast, of the result of the engagement of the 21st January, and also of the unfavourable disposition of the Elminas; in consequence of which he made the best of his way to Cape Coast Castle, where I found him on my arrival, with a considerable portion of his force.

A fourth division, under the command of Captain Blenkarne, of the Royal African Colonial Corps, was on its way to Akine, a country bordering on Ashantee, for the purpose of inducing the enemy to withdraw a part of their force from Western Wassaw; but an unfavourable disposition being shewn by the Chief of the Aquapim country, the native Chiefs, under Captain Blenkarne's command, expressed their wishes for his return. Under these circumstances he did not consider it prudent to endeavour to prosecute His Excellency's wishes, and fell back upon Accra.

Being fully sensible that this communication falls very short of what might be expected from the importance of the subjects it embraces, I must, in excuse of its defects, beg leave to say, that it has been dictated from a sick bed, and in consequence entertain an earnest hope that its imperfections may be overlooked.

As intimated in my letter of the 23d ultimo, I entrust Captain Laing with the conveyance of it, and I entertain the most confident hopes that the extensive information he will be able to afford of the present state of His Majesty's possessions here, will be considered a sufficient justification for my sending an Officer of his zeal, experience, and abilities from this station at so critical a period.

When dispositions on the part of the Ashantees were made in August last year for attacking our settlements at various points, I deemed it necessary to dispatch Captain Laing into the Fantee country, and requiring at the time (there being no military Officer capable), another Officer to take charge of the camp at Djuquah, I was induced to accept the proffered services of Lieutenant King, of His Majesty's sloop Driver, who, I understood, had frequently served ashore, and I have the satisfaction to state that from the active and determined movements of these two Officers, the enemy were deterred from prosecuting their original intentions and retired to Ashantee, since which period Captain Laing has been frequently in the command of large bodies of our allies, and discharged his duties always to the satisfaction of His Excellency the late Commander of the Forces and myself, and to the advantage of His Majesty's service.

I have great satisfaction in acquainting you that our relations with Elmina, and the other Dutch settlements, have of late undergone a most favourable change, which is solely to be attributed to the arrival from the Netherlands of a new Governor, His Excellency Major Last.

I owe it to this gentleman to say, that he has evinced a most anxious desire totally to eradicate a hostile feeling which was generated amongst the Dutch subjects on the coast towards all the inhabitants of our settlements, by the influence of the Ashantees, and the imbecile conduct of his predecessors.

To remove all doubts from the minds of the natives, respecting the part he is determined to act, he paid me a formal complimentary visit on the 14th instant, and has also zealously entered into a negotiation with the enemy for the liberation of Mr. Williams* and other prisoners in their hands.

His Excellency Major de Richelieu, Governor-in-Chief of His Danish Majesty's Settlements on the Coast, has shewn his respect and friendship for our Government by actively taking a part in the war. He has sent all the force he could collect to our aid, and is now engaged collecting a strong force to proceed through Akim towards Ashantee, with a view of diverting the enemy.

The command of this body he will take in person.

I cannot say too much in favour of the disinterested zeal and active exertions of Captain Bowen, commanding His Majesty's sloop Driver. In the month of May last year this Officer, while under cruising orders in the Bight of Benin, with considerable prospects of making prizes, received information that His Majesty's ship Bann, ordered here by the late Sir Robert Mends to co-operate with the land service, had suffered so much from sickness that she was unable to render any effectual assistance. He instantly repaired to Cape Coast and stated it to be his intention to remain until things wore a more pleasing aspect.

While at anchor here, observing the sickly state of the Officers of the Garrison, he voluntarily landed a party of his men, put the whole of the guns in the best possible order, and personally superintended the exercise of the soldiers at the use of some ship guns worked with tackles.

I also beg leave to bring under the notice of His Lordship the conduct of acting Captain Woolcombe, late of the Owen Glendower, and now of the Bann, whose activity and cordial co-operation I am induced to think prevented the inhabitants of Elmina taking a part in the war against us.

His zeal, and that of his Officers and men, cannot be too highly praised, from the cheerfulness with which they underwent the attendant fatigues of intercepting supplies by day and night forwarded by water to the enemy, in which labours Lieutenant Scott, of His Majesty's brig Swinger, shared.

SIR, Cape Coast, February 26, 1824.

IN compliance with your direction, that I should detail, as nearly as I possibly can, all the particulars that may have occurred in the division of the army which marched from Djuquah, under the immediate command of His Excellency Sir C. M. Carthy, as well as such circumstances as may have fallen under my observation, relative to the action which took place on the 21st ultimo, in the Wassaw country, between the said division and an army of Ashantees, I have the honour to state, that I marched from * MEMORANDUM.—Colonial Office, 17th June.—It has been ascertained, that the liberation of Mr. Williams has been effected.

Djuquah at seven o'clock on the morning of the 9th, with one company of the Royal African Colonial Corps, eighty strong; one company of volunteers, sixty-eight strong; three companies of militia, one hundred and seventy strong, making a force of three hundred and eighteen; besides two hundred Commendas, two hundred of Appia's people, and a company of natives of Cape Coast, about forty strong, making a total of four hundred and forty, which were ordered to follow us; this, with the troops which marched under my command, made a force of seven hundred and fifty-eight strong.

Bansoo, a village distant about seventeen miles from our camp at Djuquah, was the place at which we were directed to halt. His Excellency having marched on by himself, we overtook him about half way; the road, or rather tract, was excessively bad, in consequence of which, we did not arrive till a late hour in the evening at Bansoo, much fatigued.

We remained at Bansoo the whole of the next day, the 10th, waiting for the native force to join, which they did not do until late in the day; the next morning, the 11th, His Excellency marched off with the combined force of regulars and militia, and desired I would remain till every thing was sent forward. This I found the greatest difficulty in accomplishing, as I could not get carriers, the people who had brought the things from Djuquah having run away. I was, therefore, obliged to send a party of the rear guard to press every person they could find, women as well as men, and, after a considerable delay, we succeeded in getting a sufficient number of carriers, and proceeded; but a number of them, as they found opportunities, flung their loads into the woods and ran off. We arrived at a village on the banks of the Boosom-pra, called Ibimin, late in the evening of that day, having marched eighteen miles; where we remained till six o'clock the next morning, the 12th, when we marched for another village, about seventeen miles lower down on the banks of the Boosom-pra, named Darabooassie, which, from the extremely bad state of the path, being frequently obliged to pass swamps which took us much higher than above our knees, we did not arrive at till very late in the day, every person excessively fatigued; the native force at this time kept a considerable distance in our rear.

About seven o'clock in the morning of the 13th, we commenced crossing the River Boosom-pra, about two hundred yards wide, in small canoes (eight in number), which could only carry two men at a time, besides the person who paddled; as soon as the company of regulars, under the command of Ensign Erskine, crossed the river, His Excellency, who was one of the first that had passed over, proceeded with them on the march, towards Assamacow, in the Wassaw country, distant about twenty miles from the river. To give a description of this road is beyond my ability, suffice it to say, that in my opinion I think it impossible that there can be any thing worse in the shape of a path; we had to cross numerous small rivers, some of which, from their extreme depth, as well as the numerous swampy places we had to pass over, considerably delayed us; and we were only enabled to reach a small village, called Guah, that night, where we slept. The next morning, the 14th, His Excellency proceeded in advance with the company of the Royal

African Colonial Corps, and desired I would bring up the rear; we did not find this path so bad as was expected, and we arrived at Assamacow, at about half-past two in the afternoon, where we halted and remained five days, waiting for the native force to come up; we found Mr. Brandon, the Acting Ordnance Storekeeper (Cape Coast), at this place, where he had arrived several days before with ammunition, &c. having come in the Colonial schooner, to Succondee, ten hours march, to Assamacow, which was truly welcome now to us, as our men (the regulars and militia), had only twenty rounds each man, a great deal of which, from the badness of the paths, the crossing of rivers, and the rain which fell on our march, was damaged, and which was immediately replaced; at this place we found provisions very scarce. During our stay at Assamacow, we were informed that the Wassaws and Dinkeras were retreating before the Ashantees, and were in distress for provisions; Sir Charles, therefore, immediately on the arrival of part of our native force, dispatched Mr. Tasker Williams, the Colonial Secretary and Adjutant-General of Militia, with twelve volunteers, to assure the Wassaws and Dinkeras that he would, in a day or two, march forward with the force under his command to join them, and that he expected the division of the army, under Major Chisholm, and numerous parties of natives, would soon form a junction with us, and then we should have sufficient force to meet the Ashantees: but Mr. Williams found them retreating, and it was with the greatest difficulty he persuaded them (they having crossed the small river Adoomansoo), to halt on its bank, and make some preparation for defence till Sir Charles should join with his force; this was on the 20th, on the morning of which I arrived with the company of the Royal African Colonial Corps; the company of volunteers, and the three companies of militia, already alluded to, having, by direction of His Excellency, marched from Assamacow on the 19th. On my way to the Wassaws and Dinkeras, I met a very great number of women and children, and, sorry am I to say, men; I asked the men where they were going? they told me they were going to look for provisions, and would soon return; on my arrival on the borders of the aforesaid river Adoomansoo, on the morning of the 20th, having been, from the extreme bad state of the paths, the mud in some places reaching to the middle of our bodies, obliged to sleep one night in the bush; from Assamacow to this river, I should suppose, is distant about twenty-four miles.

Shortly after my arrival with the troops Mr. Williams, Adjutant-General of Militia, informed me that he could not get any of the people to cut the bush for the camp. I accordingly went to the Chiefs of the Wassaws and Dinkeras and told them the necessity there was for the bush about the place, intended for a camp, to be cleared, and which ought to be done immediately; they promised to send people over to the opposite bank of the river, where we expected the Ashantees to attack us, and to have all the wood cleared immediately; shortly after this the Wassaws mustered their force, and were moving off with every thing they had. I enquired where they were going? they said they were going to clear the wood on the other side of the river. I stopped where they had to cross over, for a considerable time, to see if they really intended to go over; but at last I could plainly see their intention was to retreat; I therefore put a strong guard of militia to prevent their doing so, till Sir Charles should arrive. I then sent for the Chiefs or Headmen and asked them what they intended to do, whether they intended to fight or not? they said they intended to fight. At this moment an alarm was given that the Ashantees were advancing, and every one went to his station, where we remained for about five hours, exposed to a most tremendous shower of rain; it being by this time nearly dark, and as it is a rule with the Ashantees never to fight at night, we called in the troops, leaving sentries where necessary; immediately on the alarm being given I despatched a messenger to His Excellency to request he would send all the assistance he could; at this time it was supposed His Excellency was at a room with two huts, about four or five miles from us. Both Officers and men slept this night without any covering, as there was not time to erect huts, and the men were much fatigued; next morning the 21st His Excellency arrived with about two hundred of Appia's people and forty of the natives of Cape Coast; the Commandas having halted on the way, I acquainted him with the manner the Wassaws had behaved. After he had taken a little rest he sent for the Chiefs of the Wassaws and Dinkeras, but before he had got half through the palaver, the alarm was given and every person repaired to his station. His Excellency then went round with me to see how the men were posted.

About two o'clock the Ashantees, ten thousand in number, marched up to the opposite bank of the river, when the action commenced on both sides, with determined vigour on both sides, and lasted till nearly half-past four o'clock; it was reported before four o'clock that the regulars, volunteers, and militia, had no ammunition left, only twenty rounds per man having been previously issued to them, on which I immediately went to the Ordnance Storekeeper, Mr. Brandon, who had received His Excellency's positive orders always to have forty rounds for each man, packed up in kegs, and which was always to accompany him; but he acquainted me, that he only had with him one small keg of ball and one of powder, which was immediately issued to the men, but which, it may be supposed, did not last very long. The enemy perceiving that our fire had become slacker, attempted to cross the river, and succeeded; they had frequently attempted the same thing before, but were repulsed with great slaughter; they at the same time sent a very considerable force round our flanks to cut off our retreat, which they completely succeeded in doing, from their superior numbers: the whole now became one scene of confusion, the enemy having intermixed with us. In my retreat I observed His Excellency a considerable distance before me, soon after which some guns were fired from the direction in which he was going, and there was a general rush back of the people who were following him, but after which I saw no more of His Excellency; the people took different directions, and a number of the wounded men followed me into the thickest parts of the woods, through which, with the assistance of a Wassawman, who undertook, for a reward, to guide us. We travelled the whole of that night and half the next day, frequently going a considerable distance through a stream of water, for the purpose of hiding our track. When we got into the wood leading to Assamacow, and proceeded about five miles, a party of the enemy was reported to be before us, we therefore retreated and got into another path leading to the same place, but we had not proceeded above three miles, when we had again to retreat, as a party of the enemy was just before us. Just about sunset I fortunately fell in with a party of Wassaws, who were in search of their wives and children, whom the Ashantees had taken; they said they were going towards the Boosom-pra, and that they would conduct me over to it. We, however, slept in the woods, and about three o'clock in the morning we commenced our march. We observed a number of infants lying in the bush gasping for breath, the Ashantees having taken their mothers to carry their plunder, and obliged them to throw their children away; we, however, recovered a number of the women, and killed about twenty of the enemy. I unfortunately lost my shoes in the mud on the 22d, and had to travel the whole of the 23d without shoes, a distance of about thirty miles. I shall say nothing of the hardships I underwent, as you could be able to judge from the state in which you found me on the 24th.

Before I close this, I conceive it my duty to state, that the conduct of the company of the Royal African Colonial Corps, the volunteers, and militia, was highly creditable, in short, they behaved bravely. It was reported, that Quashie Yaccoom's people (the Wassaws) left the field early in the action.

Annexed is a return of our loss in killed, wounded, and missing. The enemy's loss must have been very great, as one of our balls, from their crowded state, must have killed and wounded two or three at a time. The force we had engaged (including the Dinkeras and Wassaws) did not amount to two thousand. The Commandas were not in the action.

I have, &c.
