

Peers, on notifying their intention at this Office, by six o'clock on the evening of the 22d instant.

The better to ensure order and regularity, it is requested that Peers desirous to give tickets of admission, will have the goodness to cause application to be made for them at the Lord Great Chamberlain's-Office.

Each ticket to be filled up, signed, and sealed by the Peer issuing it.

No person can be admitted but in full dress; the doors will not be open before twelve o'clock at noon.

CHOLMONDELEY, D. G. C.

St. James's-Palace, July 17, 1830.

THIS day the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen, Recorder, Sheriffs, and Officers of the City of London, waited upon his Majesty when Newman Knowlys, Esq. the Recorder, made their compliments of congratulation and condolence in the following Address, which His Majesty was graciously pleased to receive on the Throne:

Most Gracious Sovereign,

YOUR Majesty's most dutiful and faithful subjects, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, humbly approach your Royal Person, to congratulate your Majesty on your happy accession to the Imperial Crown of these Realms, to reign over a free, loyal, and united people: we humbly offer at the same time to your Majesty our most sincere condolence on the afflicting loss which your Majesty and the whole United Kingdom have sustained in the demise of your Royal Brother, our late revered and beloved Sovereign; a loss which has inflicted a deep wound on the feelings of all the subjects of the United Empire.

We reflect with pride and gratitude on the pre-eminence-glorious attained by these realms in the deliverance of Europe from that military tyranny which had well nigh overwhelmed her, but for the energies of Britain, under Divine Providence, during the period in which the Regal functions were exercised by your Majesty's Royal Brother, our late lamented Sovereign.

We exult no less on the superiority in arts to which this country has advanced during the reign of our late Sovereign, of which the magnificent improvements in the metropolis of the empire will exhibit some of the most splendid proofs for ages yet to come.

The stream of time will sweep away the many living grateful witnesses of the amiable manners and endearing condescension of our late departed Monarch, but the faithful page of history will record to the end of time the name of George the Fourth among the number of those excellent Princes who have been at once the rulers and benefactors of their people.

Your Majesty's faithful subjects, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, feel the highest consolation that the Sceptre of these Realms is still swayed by a Prince imbued from his earliest youth with principles of the greatest veneration and regard for our glorious Constitution and the just liberties of his subjects; and they entertain the fullest persuasion, that that Constitution, and those liberties, will ever find in your Gracious Majesty their best and surest protector; and the firmest conviction, that the interests and welfare of your people, will always constitute the nearest and dearest wish of your Majesty's heart.

Accept, Gracious Sire, the cordial tribute of their most sincere loyalty and affection to your Majesty's sacred Person and Government, and the fullest assurance of their fervent prayers to the Almighty Ruler of Princes, that your Majesty's reign may be prolonged in health, in perfect connubial happiness with your illustrious and most amiable Consort, and in every other earthly blessing, to the most extended period of human existence.

To which Address His Majesty was pleased to return the following most gracious Answer:

"This dutiful and affectionate address, condoling with me on the loss which I have sustained, by the death of the late King, my lamented Brother, and congratulating me on my accession to the Throne of my Ancestors, is highly consolatory and satisfactory to my feelings.

"I cordially thank you for your assurances of affectionate attachment to myself and to the Queen, my beloved Consort.

"The love of my people, confirmed by the experience of a mild and paternal rule, will be the highest reward and gratification which I can receive.

"I am sensible that the prosperity of the City of London is intimately united with the general interests of the country, and I shall be discharging one of the most important of my public duties, and at the same time gratify my own paternal feelings for the good of my people, by manifesting, on every occasion, a watchful care for your liberties and ancient privileges, and by promoting, to the utmost of my power, your commerce, your industry, and your happiness."

They were all received very graciously and had the honor of kissing his Majesty's hand.

St. James's Palace, July 17, 1830.

THIS day the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen, Recorder, Sheriffs, Common Council, and Officers of the City of London, waited upon His Majesty with the following Address, which was read by Newman Knowlys, Esq. the Recorder, and which His Majesty was graciously pleased to receive on the Throne:

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

The dutiful and loyal Address of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London in Common Council assembled.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, approach your Majesty's Throne to offer our sincere condolence on the demise of your Majesty's Royal Brother, our late gracious and beloved Monarch, who