COLONIAL DEPARTMENT.

Downing-Street, April 10, 1832.

Extract from a Dispatch addressed by the Earl of Belmore, Governor of Jamaica, to the Right Hon. Viscount Goderich, dated Montego-bay, February 10, 1832.

I HAVE the honour to inclose the substance of the accounts I have received since the date of my last dispatch, up to the 29th ultimo, the day on which I embarked, at Port Royal, on board His Majesty's ship North Star, for Montego-bay, where I arrived in the afternoon on the 1st instant. Before I proceed to relate the transactions which have occurred since my arrival here, it is necessary I should afford your Lordship some information not contained in the annexed paper, which in fact is the original document from which the bulletins have been daily published.

In my last dispatch I informed your Lordship, that Mr. Burchell, a Baptist missionary, had arrived from England, and that, in consequence of information which had been received, it had been thought necessary to place him in custody. His papers were examined by the Custos of the parish, and, on the 17th January, I received a dispatch from Sir Willoughby Cotton, informing me that nothing therein had been found to criminate him. By the information of different negroes, and the confession of others after condemnation, it appeared that they looked forward to his arrival as the time when they were to expect freedom, "that he was to bring their freedom out," and in the disturbed state in which this district still continued, it was thought necessary to detain him. He was, accordingly, removed by Commodore Farquhar from on board His Majesty's ship Blanche, to the Garland Grove, the ship in which he sailed from England. I have also informed your Lordship that serious charges had been preferred against a Moravian minister, named Pfeiffer, and with my last dispatch, I inclosed copies of letters I directed to be written to General Crawford on this subject. I have now the honour to inclose a copy of the evidence given on his trial, by which I think it must appear, that, at a moment of great excitement, the officers who composed the court martial, discharged their duty uninfluenced by prejudice. In justice, however, to Mr. Pfeiffer,* I must also add, that the witness Sutton joined the insurgents after the trial, and has since been shot.

* Mr. Pfeiffer was acquitted.

Having received an offer from the rangers belonging to Moore-town, in the parish of Portland, and Charlestown, in the parish of Saint George, to serve in this district, I ordered a detachment of one hundred and seven men, under the command of Captain Fyffe, Superintendent at Charlestown, to embark at Port Antonio, and proceed to Palmenth, there to act under orders from Sir Willoughby Cotton, who speaks highly of their services, particularly in scouring the woods, a species of service for which their habits of life render them particularly efficient. I considered it important to avail myself of their offer, not only on this account, but also that by employing them, I thereby secured their fidelity, a consideration to which I attached much importance in the critical position of affairs at that time.

The information I received from Sir Willoughby Cotton caused me to suppose that my departure for Montego-bay might be hastened sooner than eventually it was thought expedient for me to arrive there. It became necessary, therefore, to summon a council of war, previous to my departure from the seat of government, to determine whether martial law should continue in force. The council assembled on the 21st ultimo, and decided unanimously that martial law should continue in operation.

On the 25th January, certain Wesleyan missionaries communicated their desire to wait on me. On receiving them, two of their members preferred complaints, in written papers, against some of the militia stationed at Saint Ann's-bay. I immediately directed copies of these papers to be transmitted to Major-General Cox, who is also Custos of the parish of Saint Ann, with directions that he should institute an inquiry thereon. I have the honour to transmit a copy of his reply, with the several inclosures to which he refers.

I received a dispatch from Sir W. Cotton, dated the 27th ultimo, inclosing also a letter from Mr. Barrett, the Custos of Saint James, by which I learned that both Sir Willoughby and the Custos concurred in thinking, that the time had arrived when a conditional amnesty might be proclaimed, and that my appearance here might in some degree serve to heal the moral wounds this rebellion had inflicted, and expedite the period when affairs might be suffered to resume their ordinary course. On my arrival at Montego-bay I found the favourable reports I had received from Sir W. Cotton fully confirmed. With few exceptions, the negroes in the parishes of Saint James and Trelawny had returned to their estates, and in some instances the managers of properties had begun to repair the buildings which had been destroyed on the commencement of the insurrection. The gaol, however, was crowded with prisoners, and numbers still continued to be brought in. Not one of these miserable wretches, amounting fully to five hundred, would probably escape conviction on the clearest testimony, for all were engaged in the insurrection. Enough of examples had been made to render indiscriminate punishment unnecessary, and with Sir Willoughby Cotton's full concurrence, I stopped in some measure the trials by court martial, limiting their proceedings to cases of great enormity. On the 3d instant I issued a proclamation, a copy of which is inclosed. Your Lordship may perhaps consider the terms of the proclamation to vague and undefined, that the names of those intended to be excepted ought to have been stated, and all others admitted to a free pardon; but until the overseers could be allowed to return to their estates, it was impossible to know who ought to be excepted, and at the time of issuing the proclamation I also issued a general order, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose. When returns agreeable to this order are received, I shall then discriminate even among principles, by publishing another proclamation, should it be found necessary, excepting by name those only whose offences are of a nature which must exclude them from pardon. Although I felt unable to frame the proclamation exactly to my satisfaction, I did not on that account delay to issue it, because I hoped it might save some among the insurgent slaves from the destruction they were daily exposed to while holding out in opposition to the laws; and I soon felt happy to learn that many had since returned to the estates to which they belong. The day following I constituted a commission of magistrates, in whose humanity and discretion I placed much reliance, to inquire into the nature of the charges against the prisoners, so that none should be brought to trial who were not accused of murder, or had rendered themselves conspicuous as leaders in the insurrection. The Magistrates having commenced an inquiry many were discharged and sent to the estates they respectively belonged to; others were sentenced to receive corporal punishment, on whom sentence of death must inevitably have been passed, if tried either by court martial or in a civil court of law. Those whose crimes could not be passed over were left for trial. I had not been long at Montego-bay before I felt convinced the period had arrived when martial law might be discontinued; tranquillity had been in a great measure restored in the parishes of Saint James and Trelawny, and the insurrection could now only be considered to lurk in the parish of Hanover. The returns I received before leaving the seat of government, represented the number of slaves absent from properties in Hanover at one thousand six hundred, soon after the publication of my proclamation, this amount was reduced to little more than four hundred, the rest, with the exception of some killed, having returned to the estates to which they belong. It became, therefore, a matter of great importance to relieve the overseers and book-keepers of estates, all of whom are Europeans, from militia duty, and allow them to return to the properties under their charge, for in their absence the slaves felt themselves neither under protection or controul. By the 48th of George the Third, cap. 4, commonly called the party law, the Governor is empowered to order parties of militia on duty in time of insurrection or rebellion, and this law appears exactly applicable to present circumstances. With Sir Willoughby Cotton's concurrence, and on the recommendation also of Mr. Barrett, the Custos of Saint James, I published a proclamation, declaring martial law to cease. At the same time I issued a militia general order under the party law, a copy of which is inclosed, with the proclamation. Having now accomplished all that I had hoped, and more than I had expected, in so short a time, after my arrival at Montego-bay, I determined to remain in this part of the country a few days longer, in order to observe how these measures could operate, and to employ my time by travelling through the disturbed part of the country, and visiting the properties which had chiefly suffered. Many persons also appeared to doubt whether tranquillity was sufficiently restored to dispense with martial law, and I thought I could not more strongly show that the insurrection was quelled than by travelling through the part of the district which of late had been most disturbed. On the 6th I proceeded to Lucea, where I met the Custos and several Magistrates of the parish of Hanover.

The prison there was also crowded, and I directed the same course to be pursued, as I had adopted in Saint James's. The following day I crossed by an interior road to Savanna-la-Mar, where also I met the Custos of Westmorland and other Magistrates, to whom I made a similar communication.

On the 9th I continued my route in New Savanna, the residence of Mr. Salmon, in the parish of Saint Elizabeth, where I met General Robertson, commanding the militia in that district. Accompanied by General Robertson and Mr. Salmon, on the 11th, I proceeded on my return to Montego-bay, by the western interior road, through an estate called Woodstock, to Struire, a port now occupied by a detachment of militia, but where the insurgents had made a stand, from thence through the estates of York and Greenwich to Hazelymph and Seven Rivers, Lord Seaford's estates of Old and New Montpellier, Anchovy Bottom, and then descending the hill, to Montego-bay. I am particular in describing this track, because it leads through the country which lately had been the seat of the insurrection, and from whence, looking across the Great River, I could see Catadilla, Lapland, and Ginger-hill, places, the names of which, your Lordship will find frequently contained in my former dispatches. The whole of this country presents one scene of devastation, the buildings on every estate being burnt down, and the greater part of the canes destroyed by cattle. On either side, but especially in the eastern direction, to a large extent, the same work of destruction has been continued. On all the estates, however, through which I passed, except the estate of Greenwich, I heard that the negroes had, with very few exceptions, returned, and were conducting themselves in as orderly a manner as could be expected. The overseer at Greenwich complained that several of those who had returned, had again left the estate; and that two of the slaves had killed an ox, a day or two previous; and had not since been seen. I assembled the slaves I found on this estate, directing my observations chiefly to the head men of the property, desiring them to explain to any now absent, that the proclamation I had issued, offered free pardon to all but principals in the insurrection; that every one must now see how vain and hopeless any attempt of insurrection must prove, and what distress and misery they had brought on themselves by the destruction they had committed; that they were now houseless, and in a great degree their provision grounds had been destroyed, sharing the same fate as the canefields of their masters; that all before me had been guilty of rebellion, and thereby had exposed themselves to suffer death, but that pardon was now offered to them provided they continued in lawful obedience, whilst those who should return to their former rebellious practices would be deprived of all benefit of forgiveness. I then caused the proclamation to be read to them, and inquired if they had any complaint to make. Silence ensued, when an old woman said they had no complaint to tell me of, but promised they would be good, and were sorry for what they had done.

On my arrival at Montego bay, I had the mortification to learn that a new scene of disorder had occurred during my absence. A party of the 84th regiment had occupied a chapel belonging to the Baptists, by order of Sir Willoughby Cotton, during the insurrection, and this detachment having moved to Lucea, on the same day a large mob assembled and razed it to the ground. I have the honour to inclose your Lordship a copy of a letter I this day received from the Custos, informing me of this disgraceful proceeding. I regret also to learn that the Baptist chapels at Falmouth, Lucea, and Savanna-la-Mar have shared the same fate. Such turbulent and disorderly conduct calls for my immediate interference, and I inclose your Lordship a proclamation which I shall cause to be printed and distributed to-morrow, this day being Sunday. It is certain, however, that an opinion generally prevails that the insurrection, which now happily is quelled, has been the work of the Baptists, and the houses and small settlements belonging to free people of colour, many of whom are in the militia, having shared equally in destruction with larger plantations belonging to the white inhabitants. I greatly apprehend that the mischief may not be confined to the extent I am now acquainted with.

At the Council-Chamber, Whitehall, the 5th Day of April 1832,

By the Lords of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council.

WHEREAS by an Act, passed in the second year of the reign of His present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the prevention, as far as may be possible, of the disease, called the cholera, or spasmodic, or Indian cholera, in England," it is, amongst other things, enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the Lords and others of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, or any two or more of them (of whom the Lord-President of the Council, or one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State for the time being, shall always be one), by any Order or Orders to be by them from time to time made, to establish, and again, from time to time, by any such Order or Orders, to revoke, renew, alter, or vary all such new rules and regulations as to them may appear necessary or expedient, for the prevention, as far as may be possible, of the spreading of the said disease, called the cholera, or spasmodic, or Indian cholera; in England or Wales, or any part thereof, or for the relief of any persons suffering under, or likely to be affected by, the said disease:
