The Deputies which the States General sent to the States of Friezeland to persuade them to consent to the new Levy, are come back, and have made Report to the States General, that arriving at Leuwaerden, the States of that Province, who had separated themselves some days before, re-assembled purposely to receive them, and that having heard what the said Deputies were directed to represent to them, they had declared, that they could not consent to the said Levy, for the reasons which they had already communicated to the States General. We cannot yet say with any certainty what will be done in this matter of the new Levy, the opposition of Friezeland and Groning having hitherto kept the States General from coming to a resolution therein, though it's thought they will at last proceed in it by plurality of Voices, and that in such case the Levy will be made according to the Quota's of those that have consented to it, and so it will not come to above 8 or 9000 men.
