

name respected and revered. He was the friend of his country and of mankind, and was as active in doing good as in devising it; and, as the firm supporter and advocate of civil and religious freedom, His Royal Highness was ever as judicious as he was eminently conspicuous. He was a man of the people; strenuous for their rights, and endeared to them by his uniformly kind, enlightened, and consistent conduct.

His affectionate regard for your Majesty your Majesty alone is best able to appreciate.

His excellencies cannot fail to live in your Majesty's memory, and it is the consideration of these, whilst they shed lustre on his name, increases the poignancy of our regret.

Given under our common seal, the 1st day of May 1843.
