Board of Trade, Whitehall
August 25, 1863.

THE Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade have received from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs the following translation, forwarded by Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Hamburg, of Regulations, &c., issued by the Hanoverian Government, relative to the Harbour of Geestemünde, which was opened on the 21st ultimo.

PROCLAMATION of the Royal Hanoverian Minister of Finance and Commerce relating to the Opening of the new Harbour for sea-going ships, at Geestemünde.

We hereby make known to all persons connected with navigation and commerce that the harbour, for sea-going ships, lately constructed by the Royal Hanoverian Government, on the Lower Weser, in the immediate neighbourhood of Bremerhaven, will be opened on the 21st of July, of this year, for public traffic.

Although the harbour is not of the projected depth, yet it is already navigable for all ships drawing not more than 22 feet Hanoverian, or 21½ feet English.

Hanover, July 15, 1863.

(Signed) ERXLEBEN,
Royal Minister for Finance and Commerce.

DESCRIPTION of the harbour for sea-going ships, at Geestemünde, and the facilities which it affords in conjunction with the railway for navigation and trade (extracted from the remarks prefixed to the plan of Geestemünde, published by the Hanoverian Minister of Finance and Commerce).

The new harbour is situated at the terminus of the railway from Bremen to the Lower Weser, and is therefore in close connection with the railways throughout Germany.

The new harbour is not within the German Customs' Union (Zollverein), but has been declared a free port, and the plan shows how the harbour and railway terminus of Geestemünde are surrounded by Zollverein territory.

So much of the projected harbour is completed as is considered sufficient for the present purposes of trade and navigation, and the carrying out of the whole plan will keep pace with the increase of traffic.

In its present state the new harbour consists of a spacious basin, connected, by means of canals, with the interior of Geestemünde.

The principal harbour is 1,734 feet long, 400 feet broad, and 26½ feet Hanoverian (or 25½ feet English) deep. The height of the water in this harbour corresponds with the average high water (=11.4 feet) of the Weser level. The sluice connecting the harbour with the Weser, in order to protect ships against contrary winds, leads into the mouth of the Geeste, and is connected with the Weser by a well-constructed outer-harbour. The large harbour-sluice is constructed with ebb and flood gates, so that ships may enter and leave at all times, and not be limited as with dock-sluices to a passage only whilst the outside water is on a level with the water of the basin. The sluice is 80 feet Hanoverian (=76½ English) wide, and between the gates 250 feet Hanoverian (239½ English) long, and ships drawing not more than 25½ feet Hanoverian (=24½ English) may pass through unimpeded at all times; with flood-tide the sluice can be left quite open like a dock-sluice, and so allow the passage of ships of any length.

The principal canal leading from the harbour-basin is 150 feet Hanoverian (=143½ English) in breadth, and the cross canal leading therefrom is 112 feet Hanoverian (=107½ English) in breadth, and the depth of the water in both canals is 21 feet Hanoverian (=20½ English).

The harbour-basin is provided on both sides of its length and also the side through which is the entrance to the canal with massive quays. The length of the quay-wall round the harbour is about 3,600 feet. The quays are built to the height of the railway terminus near the harbour, viz., 7½ feet above the level of the water in the basin, and are provided with all requisites for mooring ships.

Every precaution is taken against risk of fire; and ships can be supplied with fresh water by pipes from the waterworks.

The railway terminus is brought into close connection with the new harbour, it surrounds the harbour basin, and adjoins a part of the canal, and every facility, by means of hydraulic cranes, is afforded for loading and unloading ships directly from and into the railway waggons, as also for taking in ballast.

Two large warehouses are already built for the warehousing of goods duty free, and are connected with the railway and shipping. They are massively built and provided with tanks of water for cases of fire; and the settlement of the duty on goods destined for the Zollverein can be arranged on the spot.

The railway building contains every possible convenience and affords every facility for transacting all business relating to the payment of Customs' Duties, and the terminus is also connected by a branch railway with the docks at Bremerhaven.

PROCLAMATION of the Geestemünde Harbour Regulations, and the Tariff of the Geestemünde Harbour Dues.

61. Proclamation of the Royal Ministry of Finance and Commerce of the Geestemünde Harbour Regulations and the Tariff of the Geestemünde Harbour Dues. Hanover, July 15th, 1863.

We hereby bring the harbour regulations and the tariff of dues for the harbour of Geestemünde to public notice, and do order that they shall come into force with the opening of the new harbour, for sea-going ships of Geestemünde, on the 21st July instant, and at the same time that the harbour regulations hitherto existing, dated July 30th, 1851, as also the tariff, dated October 22nd, 1858, and October 24th, 1860, shall be no longer in force.

Hanover, July 15th, 1863.

Royal Hanoverian Ministry of Finance and Commerce.

(Signed) ERXLEBEN.

HARBOUR REGULATIONS.—GEESTE-MÜNDE.

Sec. 1.

The district of the harbour to which the present harbour regulations apply embraces:

1. The principal harbour, the ship-canals communicating with the same, the sluice, the entrance harbour, the anchorage for ships, on the left bank of the river Geeste, and the harbour for wood.

2. The quays and places of traffic adjoining the principal harbour, the ship-canals, the entrance harbour, and the anchorage for ships on the left bank of the Geeste, those quays, however, excepted which are situated on the east side of the principal harbour, and the south side of the chief canal, as far as the turn-bridge, as also the coal railway, and all thereto belonging on the west side of the principal harbour.

These places and those for warehousing goods and the cranes on the same shall be under the control of the railway administration, and the rules as to the use of them, are to be found in the regulations as to the warehouses and cranes. (See Sec. 29).

Sec. 2.

The administration of the harbour shall be in the hands of the harbour authorities, and subject to them, of the harbour-master. The latter shall perform his duties with the assistance of the officers and subordinates under him.

Sec. 3.

Ship-masters, seamen, raft-masters, carriers, workmen, and such like persons engaged in different pursuits in the harbour district, have to follow implicitly, and at once, the directions and orders which may be given them by the harbour authorities, or by the harbour-master, or by his officers, or by the subordinates in their name.

In the same manner, the masters of ships and rafts arriving outside the harbour, have to comply with such of the rules and harbour regulations, as concern them, as also with those orders which may be given to them by the harbour authorities relating to the entering the harbour.

Sec. 4.

Should any one deem himself aggrieved by directions or orders from the harbour authorities or the harbour master, he may either enter his complaint in the book for complaints kept in the harbour office, or, in the former case, may complain to the Royal General Directors of Water Works at Hanover, or, in the latter case, to the Harbour Department. Complaints against subordinate officers, must be laid before the harbour master or his assistants. Against the decision of the Royal General Directors of Water Works, an appeal shall be allowed to the Royal Ministry of Finance and Commerce.

The bringing forward a complaint, or the entering of an appeal, shall not release from the obligation to obey the direction or order in question, except such release shall be expressly conceded at the time, or after the direction or order is given.

Sec. 5.

Every ship about to enter the harbour, must, already in the road outside the buoys, make signal by hoisting two flags, one above the other, on the main-mast, at the same time hoist her flag to show her nationality.

Sec. 6.

No ship or raft shall be allowed to anchor so close to the mouth of the river Geeste as to thereby obstruct ships entering or leaving the harbour.

Sec. 7.

Every sea-going ship of a tonnage of 60 ship-lasts or upwards, (excepting steam-tugs towing other vessels in and out, and steamers regularly employed in conveying passengers from the river Geeste) have on entering the harbour, as well as on leaving the same to take one of the appointed pilots. The latter has to pilot the ship to or from the place of anchorage respectively.

Under difficult circumstances, as for instance at night, in a fog, storm, or the breaking up of the ice, &c., the harbour-master may order even those ships to take a harbour-pilot, which are otherwise not obliged.

Every sea-going ship on entering or leaving, must, in order to her being properly moored, provide a boat with the necessary crew, or make use of the boat and crew provided by the harbour-master.

Sec. 8.

No ships shall be allowed without special permission from the harbour-master to remain longer in the fair water of the Geeste or the entrance-harbour than is requisite for entering or leaving. Smaller vessels and boats only may on special request remain or anchor longer than is before mentioned.

Steamers must, on entering or leaving, always proceed as slowly as is compatible with their keeping the right course; they must also give way to sailing-ships, sailing in or out, and if they cannot do so, they must stop their engines.

The anchors of ships entering and leaving must hang below the cat-head.

The directions as to wood-rafts entering; their remaining in the harbour; &c., must be applied for before the rafts enter the Geeste.

Sec. 9.

As soon as a ship entering shall have passed through the sluice, or has arrived at her anchorage in the Geeste, the master must report the fact or cause it to be reported to the harbour-master. Thereupon the certificate of registry, and the articles of agreement with the crew must be produced, the name of the ship, the port whence she comes, and a general statement of the nature and destination of the cargo must be furnished, and then the further directions of the harbour-master as to the place for mooring and other matters must be awaited.

Exempted from such reports are only steam-tugs, steamers employed in the regular conveyance of passengers, lighters, small boats and others not intended to carry goods, also such small vessels as convey only agricultural produce for ordinary market purposes, or are in ballast only.

Sec. 10.

The passage through the sluice will be open: in the summer months, between April 1st and October 1st, from 5 a.m. to 8 p.m.; in the winter months, between October 1st and April 1st, from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., at other times only with a special permission from the harbour-master.

In passing through the sluice, every ship must be furnished with so-called fenders, which must be employed carefully, so as to avoid their violently striking.

In passing through the sluice or gates, neither ship-hooks, poles, nor the like must be struck, placed, or stuck against the walls or gates of the sluice, but the rings, post and windlasses placed there must be used.

Sec. 11.

Every ship must be moored at the place appointed, and there securely fastened, in compliance with the directions given, to the rings, posts, or buoys, or otherwise, and shall not be moored in any other place, unless after other order or permission obtained from the harbour-master.

The pile-works of protection fixed on the Geeste quay and the piles adjoining to the turn-bridge in the chief canal shall not be used for making anything fast to. To the piles in the Geeste, ships may be fastened only in stormy weather, and in such a manner that on other ships entering the cables and chains may be immediately loosened.

Steamers stopping at the landing-bridges, must, after their arrival, if so ordered by the harbour-master, leave and take another place.

Two or more steamers are not to lie together at the landing-bridges.

Sec. 12.

If the harbour-master so orders, every ship must without loss of time be moved from its first berth, and be moored at another, and even if so ordered must be moved out of the harbour. At the request of the ship-master, should the harbour-master think it requisite, harbour-pilots may be sent to assist the former in moving the ship at his own expense.

Sec. 13.

If two vessels are meeting they must each keep to the right-hand side (port their helms). Vessels under weigh must keep out of the way of vessels taking in cargo, discharging or under other circumstances not under weigh.

If, however, a vessel under weigh has not the requisite room to keep out of the way, vessels not under weigh must make way and take in all tackle and rigging that may be in the way. Moreover, crews of ships meeting or passing, must help one another in every possible manner.

Sec. 14.

Every ship must, whilst lying in harbour, have at least one man on board. Only ships laid up for the winter and those to which express permission has been given by the harbour-master may be left entirely without master or crew. For such ships, however, some authorised person living in Geestemünde itself, or in the neighbourhood, must be appointed, who must carry out all directions respecting the vessel, in default of which the harbour-master may have such orders carried out at the expense of the ship.

Sec. 15.

Damage done to the harbour works by blows, or grappling them with ship or boat-hooks or poles, incautious sailing or otherwise, shall be severely punished.

Sec. 16.

Stones, earth, rubbish, ballast, ashes, slags, or such like articles shall not be thrown overboard in the harbour district (see Sec. 1.), but must be conveyed to the land and taken to the places appointed for such purposes.

In cases of contravention the obligation to remove the articles in question shall be added to the penalty incurred.

Sec. 17.

Whenever a vessel is sunk, the owner shall be obliged to cause the same and cargo to be removed without delay, in default of doing which, the same may be done at the expense of the owner. He who, intentionally or through negligence, has caused the sinking of the ship shall be liable to punishment.

Sec. 18.

Ships freighted with gunpowder or petroleum shall not enter any part of the harbour district, but must lie at a proper distance from other vessels in the roadstead. By the same rule gunpowder or petroleum shall not be allowed to be taken into vessels in the harbour district.

Smaller quantities of gunpowder on board of vessels entering must immediately be correctly reported to the harbour-master, who will give such orders as may be necessary. No more than six pounds in safe places may be kept on board. Any charges that may be in the guns must be taken out.

The shooting with fire-arms of any description whatsoever, as well as the use of gunpowder in any other manner in the harbour district (Sec. 1.) is strictly prohibited.

On vessels intending to enter, but having on board easily combustible articles, or such as may cause heat and combustion (for instance sulphuric acid, quick-lime), or should the cargo be already heated or ignited, as also in cases where such articles are intended to be laden into ships in the harbour district, the harbour-master must, in order that he may take the requisite steps, be informed, and especially of the number and size of the casks, vessels, &c., containing such articles.

Articles easily combustible but hard to extinguish, such as pitch, resin, tar, &c., may only be melted or heated in the places assigned by the harbour-master, and under the regulations for safety given by him.

The fumigating of ships for driving away rats, &c., may only be undertaken with special permission from the harbour-master, and only in the places assigned and under the supervision of an officer appointed at the expense of the ship. Moreover, only charcoal which does not emit flames may be used in such proceeding.

During the loading and unloading of combustible articles, such as pitch, tar, hemp, cotton, &c., no tobacco shall be smoked, and no fire or light used in the vicinity. In order to see to the compliance with this order, an officer may be appointed at the ship's expense.

Fires may be lighted and kept up on board ship only from sunrise to sunset, and in perfectly secure fire-places. Ashes and slags must be kept in metal vessels with well-fastened covers. A light shall only be burned from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. in well-fastened lanterns; at other times for the keeping up a fire or the burning a light, as also the burning a light in uncovered lanterns under any circumstances the special permission of the harbour-master must be obtained: the latter is also empowered to prohibit entirely, or to restrict the above-mentioned regular use of fire and light.

Sec. 19.

Whenever fire breaks out in the harbour, or in the neighbourhood, the ships crews must immediately repair to their ships, and if these are endangered, or likely to be so, they must by the use of engines wet sail-cloths or sails, or in any other way exert themselves to prevent the spreading of the fire.

Moreover in such cases the crews shall on the requisition of the harbour, or superior authorities, lend personal assistance, and also on such requisition vessels and other things must be placed for use, for extinguishing and checking the fire, or saving goods.

Sec. 20.

Whenever the harbour is frozen up, cutting through the ice for ships entering and leaving, will, unless the master prefers to undertake it himself, be done at the expense of the ship as far as possible by the harbour authorities.

Around each ship wintering in the harbour, the water must always be kept open.

Sec. 21.

The keel-hawling of ships, as also the repairing of the same above the water-line shall only be done with the permission of the harbour-master, and at the place pointed out for such purposes.

The floats to be used for this purpose shall not lie in the way of other ships, and the materials of wood on the quays must be removed before evening, and any of it falling into the water must be carefully prevented.

Sec. 22.

The passing of row-boats in the harbour, from and to the ships, shall only be allowed to the ships' crews and to the boatmen authorized by the harbour authorities for the purpose.

Sec. 23.

The right to use the berths for loading and discharging cargo, shall as a rule be regulated according to the priority in which the ships are reported to the harbour-master.

Whenever a certain time is prescribed for loading or unloading cargo, but within such time the loading or unloading is not completed, then a prolongation of the time shall as a rule only be granted, provided the first term has been properly used; but if not, such berth for loading or discharging cargo, may be assigned to the ships next in turn as reported.

Also the voluntary cessation of a berth for loading or discharging cargo in favour of the ship next in turn reported, must be with the previous approval of the harbour-master, which, however, will not be refused, except on special grounds.

In loading or discharging cargo over the quay, the goods must be hoisted and moved either by cranes, or be taken out of or into the ships on landing bridges, but they must not be dragged about, rolled, or placed on the quay, so as to be any obstacle in the way of the ship tackling, or cause any damage to the same.

Moreover goods must only remain so long in the quay as is requisite for loading, discharging, or conveying them away.

The landing bridges must be supplied by the ships, and are to be so constructed as to prevent as much as possible goods from falling into the water of the harbour.

The ships must, when ordered by the harbour-master, be connected with the quay by a secure bridge, provided with a railing and cross-bars. To river-going ships, however, this regulation does not apply.

The harbour and sluice-steps may be used only for light articles carried by hand.

Whenever a sea-going ship discharges into a river-going ship, only one at a time of the latter kind shall be permitted alongside the sea-going ship, in order that the free movements of other ships may not be obstructed.

Should one ship load or discharge cargo across another ship, the deck of the latter must be kept free from obstructions to the loading or discharging.

The cranes belonging to the harbour authorities shall only be used under the supervision of the harbour-officers, and not allowed to be weighted with a heavier burden than they are constructed to bear. After being used they must always be wound up and turned over the quay. Letting go suddenly of the crane-windlass is forbidden.

Sec. 24.

The harbour authorities shall not be responsible for any damage done to ships or goods while in the harbour district, though such damage may be done by other ships, or by persons employed therein, or in loading or discharging cargo, or in any other manner.

Sec. 25.

Every ship-master who wishes to pay off or discharge his crew, or a part of them, must give previous notice at the harbour-office, either himself or through the harbour-master, and at the same time deliver in the Papers of Legitimation of the persons to be discharged. Until this be done seamen, though discharged, will be treated as still in the service of the ship. (See Sec. 28, latter part).

Seamen are not allowed to go on shore with arms of any kind whatever, or with large knives in their possession.

Foreign workmen, boatmen, or seamen may not, without special permission, be taken and lodged on board the ships.

Sec. 26.

During the principal Divine Service, morning and afternoon working, loading, or discharging cargo shall only be allowed by the special permission of the authorities.

Sec. 27.

The harbour dues shall be paid according to the annexed tariff, in order to show that they have been paid, the receipt for the same must be produced whenever a ship leaves, that is to say before she passes through the sluice, or before she leaves her moorings in the Geeste; and at the same time must be delivered in at the harbour-office a statement of the nature and quantities of the cargo loaded or discharged in the harbour or a copy of the manifest.

Sec. 28.

In so far as by law no other punishment is declared, every contravention of the above rules shall be punished by a fine not exceeding 25 dollars in amount, and every repetition of the offence by a fine not exceeding 50 dollars in amount, but in cases where gunpowder or petroleum shall be on board and not reported, by a fine not exceeding 10 dollars for amount for every cask or vessel so not reported.

Should damage be caused by such contraventions, the same must likewise be compensated for. (Secs. 48 and 49 of the Police-Penal Law of May 25, 1847.)

Moreover any legal remedy which may arise in consequence of such contravention shall not be invalidated by the above-named penalties.

Whenever any order given shall not be punctually carried out, the harbour authorities may direct the order to be complied with at the expense of the negligent persons.

The ship-master, and in his default the ship (subject to the remedy against the person in fault) shall be liable for the fines and payments adjudged against the ships' crews and workmen engaged by the ship-masters, as well as for compensation for any damage occasioned by them.

Sec. 29.

There shall be handed to every ship-master at his first arrival at the harbour for his information a copy of these harbour regulations and tariff of dues, as well as of the regulations in respect to warehousing and of those respecting the cranes (see Sec. 1), and such master must make his crew and the workmen engaged by him acquainted with the same.
