It is Her Majesty's command that no presentations shall be made at the Levee, except in accordance with the above regulations.

It is particularly requested, that in every case the names be very distinctly written upon the cards to be delivered to the Lord Chamberlain, in order that there may be no difficulty in announcing them to His Royal Highness.

No. 1.

From the Officer Commanding 94th Regiment to the Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, Transvaal Camp, Madder Spruit, near Mr. Prinsloe's Farm, forwarded by Colonel Bellairs, Commanding Transvaal District.

SIR,

December 26, 1880.

I HAVE the honour to report that, on the 20th instant, the troops under my command, as per margin,* while on the march from Middleburg to Pretoria, had an engagement with a large body of rebel Boers under Commandant-General Piet Joubert, near Prinsloe's Farm, on the Madder Spruit.

I had no expectation of meeting the enemy at this spot, as the Field Cornet had stated, in conversation, to some of the officers that there was a friendly meeting going on close by, and that emissaries had gone through the country endeavouring to rouse the people to stop us, but that the appeal met with no response.

The only cavalry with us were four Mounted Infantry, so scouting could not be efficiently performed; but one man, while on the march, was always sent to the rise in front, and another one to the highest hill commanding the country.

Lieutenant MacSweeney was employed as Intelligence Officer, to give information as to the enemy's whereabouts. I understand that the enemy followed us nearly all the way from Middleburg, keeping well out of sight, which, as they were all mounted, did not interfere with their power of catching us up at any moment.

The country round the scene of action is well but not thickly wooded, and well suited for cavalry, and fringed round the edge of the plateau by ravines, intermixed with well-wooded farmyards, which could conceal a large number of troops.

At about 12.45 p.m. two or three scouts were seen at about 600 yards distance. I therefore rode back to form up the leading and stop the remaining wagons, but within five minutes of this, the enemy appeared in skirmishing order on the rise of a slight wooded hill on the left.

* 94th Foot: 246 officers, non-commissioned officers and men, 3 women, and 2 children. Army Service Corps: 2 officers, 5 non-commissioned officers and men. Army Hospital Corps: 3 non-commissioned officers and men. Army Medical Department: 1 surgeon.

In addition, there were large numbers in rear and on our right flank, but what number I am unable to state, nor have I been able since to obtain any accurate information; but from the report of the officer commanding the rear-guard, and from the statements of the Boers themselves after the action, I do not think that from 1,200 to 1,500 would be overstating their numbers. The Boers sent forward a flag of truce half-way between the lines, and I walked to meet it.

The bearer handed me an English letter, signed by Piet Joubert, and countersigned by other Boers, requesting me to wait at the spot where I then was until a reply had been received to an ultimatum that had been sent to Sir Owen Lanyon. I told the interpreter I could not do so, as I had orders to proceed with all possible dispatch to Pretoria, and that I had no wish to meet him hostilely.

He said that he would take my message to the Commandant-General, and I asked him to let me know the result, to which he nodded assent.

Almost immediately, however, the enemy's line advanced. I ran back as fast as I could, ordering the leading company to skirmish, but before they could open out to more than loose files a murderous fire was poured upon them, which was as hotly returned. The fire lasted for less than a quarter of an hour, when observing that all the officers and about two out of three of the non-commissioned officers and men were either dead or wounded, I ordered the cease fire to be sounded, and hoisted a flag of truce to save the lives of the remainder.

In the meantime, fighting was going on all along the line of wagons up to the rear-guard, about 200 Boers firing a volley within 430 yards, then dashing up to the wagons, shooting the oxen, particularly the leading ones, and killing or wounding a great many of the men in charge.

Immediately after the flag of truce was hoisted, Commandant Joubert came forward and shook hands with me, saying he was sorry to see me wounded. He then ordered the remainder of the men to surrender their arms, accoutrements, &c., together with all the wagons, to proceed to their camp, some distance off, promising, however, that all the private baggage should be returned; he also allowed 18 men to be left to attend to the wounded, and the remainder, about 40 non-commissioned officers and men, and Captain and Paymaster Elliott, A.P.D. (not wounded), to proceed to their camp en route to Heidelberg, where he was proceeding the same afternoon with his army.

Killed.

94th Foot.—Captain Nairne, Lieutenant Mac-Sweeney, mortally wounded, died in a few hours; Lieutenant and Adjutant Harrison; 59 non-commissioned officers and men (including 6 died since action).

Army Service Corps.—2 non-commissioned officers; Conductor Bancroft.

Wounded.

94th Foot.—Lieutenant-Colonel Anstruther, dangerously; Lieutenant Hume, severely; 82 non-commissioned officers and men (the greater part of whom severely); the wife of Serjeant-Major Fox, severely.

Army Service Corps.—Deputy-Assistant Commissary-General Carter, dangerously; Conductor Egerton, slightly; 2 non-commissioned officers.

Army Medical Department.—Surgeon Ward, slightly.

Army Hospital Corps.—2 privates.

All horses were killed or taken.

With regard to the losses of the enemy, it is difficult to give an accurate estimate. The Provost-Serjeant tells me he counted 27 bodies in one farm and 17 in another waiting for interment. But the Boers are very reticent on the subject, and I fancy a great many more were killed.

I regret exceedingly the disastrous termination of the engagement, but I trust that it will be considered I did right in surrendering when I did; outnumbered as we were, we could have no chance of success in continuing it.

I also regret that the whole of the Orderly-Room, Paymaster, and Quartermasters' books, &c., have been taken, but I am informed by Commandant Prinsloe, in command here, that they, together with the private property, will be returned.

All the officers present at the engagement behaved well, particularly Lieutenant and Adjutant Harrison, who encouraged the men to the utmost of his power until shot through the head alongside me; also Lieutenant Hume, who commanded his company very efficiently. Orderly-Room Clerk Maistre and Serjeant Master-Tailor Pears, in the absence of officers, carried the colours, and showed good service in hiding them in a wagon.

Serjeant-Major Fox and Quartermaster-Serjeant Earle (both wounded), rendered, in the absence of officers, able assistance, and Serjeants Newton and Hook indefatigably exerted themselves in bringing in the wounded and burying the dead all through the night and the following day.

Deputy-Assistant Commissary-General Carter, Conductor Egerton and Transport-Serjeant Bennett, Army Service Corps, were simply indefatigable. They were all wounded, Mr. Carter very severely, three places, and Serjeant Bennett dangerously, and I am very much afraid that his wounds may entail loss of his thigh.

Conductor Egerton, though wounded, volunteered to walk into Pretoria to obtain medical assistance, and also to carry in the colours, which he had judiciously torn from the poles and wrapped round him under his coat.

Mess-Serjeant Bradley volunteered to accompany him, and having obtained a safe conduct, they started, and I believe delivered the news about 4 a.m. next morning, having run the distance of 42 miles within 11 hours.

It was exceeding fortunate that Providence spared our only Medical Officer and his Assistant Surgeon. Ward's work can hardly be described. It was endless for 48 hours; until assistance arrived, he had not one moment to himself.

In conclusion, I have only to bring to notice the conduct of the men, which was admirable.

They were as steady as rocks, and consoled themselves for the surrender with the thought that the tables would be turned before long.

The Boers are very sorry at having wounded a woman, and the minute after the arms were laid down, they became most obliging and civil. They offered to get us everything they could for our comfort, and it was not a hollow promise.

Every day they come in numbers, bringing milk, butter, eggs, bread, apricots, &c., and if a man goes to any of their farms they at once, without payment, give him anything he wants.

I have, &c.

(Signed) PHILIP R. ANSTRUTHER,
Lieut.-Colonel,
Commanding 94th Regiment.

No. 2.

From Major-General Sir G. Pomeroy-Colley to the Secretary of State for War.—(Received 25th March, 1881.)

*Army Head-Quarters, Mount Prospect,
February 12, 1881.*

SIR,

FOR some days after the engagement at the Laing's Neck, reported in my despatch of the 3rd instant, the Boers remained quiet, occupied apparently in further concentrating their forces and strengthening their position; and our communications with Newcastle were uninterrupted. I sent the Natal Mounted Police back to Newcastle at once, to guard against any raids on that part of Natal; and some days later sent in the bulk of our transport, with the double object of reducing the number of animals in camp, and bringing out fresh supplies when opportunity should offer.

2. On the 3rd, a large convoy of wounded was sent in to Newcastle, and, up to the 6th, wagons with bread and other supplies reached the camp unmolested. The post ran regularly, and the telegraph line was uninterrupted.

3. On the 7th, the post, proceeding as usual with a small escort, was fired upon by a party of Boers, at a point a little beyond the double drift on the Ingogo, and obliged to return. The escort reported having seen about 50 or 100 Boers on the ridge between the Ingogo and Imbazane valleys. The same evening I received information from other sources that the Boers had detached a small force to harass our communications and intercept wagons, &c., passing between this and Newcastle.

4. On the morning of the 8th, I moved out with a force of 5 companies 60th Rifles, under Colonel Ashburnham, 2 field and 2 mountain guns, under Captain Greer, R.A., and a detachment of 38 mounted troops, under Major Brownlow, King's Dragoon Guards, to patrol the road, and meet and escort some wagons expected from Newcastle. My mounted force was necessarily very weak, owing to the withdrawal of the Natal Police, and to the casualties suffered by the mounted squadron on the 28th ultimo.

5. The Ingogo river crosses the Newcastle road about 5 miles south of this camp, taking its rise in a deep recess or bend in the Drakensberg, and running from west to east, through a valley about 5 miles wide, to the Buffalo river, which it joins about 4 miles below the road. Two main branches unite just below where the road crosses them; whence this crossing is known as the "Double Drift." The two fords, which are about 100 yards apart, are rocky, with a rapid current, and sometimes dangerous in the sudden floods to which these mountain streams are liable.

6. The ridges to the north of the river, which are spurs of the remarkable square-topped mountain, immediately overlooking this camp, and named the Umquelo, fall steeply in a series of steps to the Ingogo; the road winds down a long stony hill, 2 miles in length, between two of these spurs, commanded for its whole length by the ridges on each side. On the south side of the river a plain or very gentle rise extends for more than a mile to the foot of the ridge or plateau which separates the Ingogo and Imbazane valleys. This ridge is nearly level on its summit, strewn with rocks and boulders, and irregularly cut by rocky valleys, now expanding into a broad plateau, and again narrowing to a mere neck. Its slopes, as a rule, are stony, but not very steep. The road rises to its summit by an easy ascent along the face of a projecting spur.

7. Leaving 2 mountain guns and a company of the 60th on a commanding position on the crest of the ridge to the north of the Ingogo, I moved down the road with the rest of the force, our front covered by the mounted troops, and the ridges on each side occupied by infantry. No enemy, however, was seen until our scouts, cresting the hills beyond the Ingogo, reported Boer patrols in sight. The column having crossed the Ingogo and drawn in its flankers, halted and formed on the plain south of the Double Drift, and then resumed its march.

8. As we approached the foot of the ridge already described, reports were brought in that the Boers were in considerable force in our front, showing a strong skirmishing line, with four supports of 50 or 60 men each; and shortly afterwards our vedettes were driven in. I immediately pushed forward with the advanced guard to occupy the point of the ridge which the road ascends. As we did so the Boers showed in large numbers about half a mile distant, and at once galloped forward boldly to dispute the ridge, and to take advantage of the cover which the intersecting valleys afforded. The guns were brought into action, but the Boers had already got under cover, and now pushed up the valleys wherever cover could be got, directing a heavy and accurate fire on our guns and skirmishers, at the same time throwing their right rapidly forward to envelop us. The companies of the 60th, as they came up the hill, were pushed forward to meet these attacks—and in a few minutes the engagement became heavy and general.

9. The ground occupied by us was a small plateau, roughly triangular in shape, forming part of the main ridge, with which it is connected by necks slightly lower than the plateau we held. The enemy's attack embraced the south and western faces of the triangle and the eastern angle. Part of the plateau was fringed with rocks, affording good cover, but towards the eastern angle there was no cover except such as the grassy brow of the hill afforded; and one company of the 60th Rifles pushed forward in the angle to cover the guns, and meeting the Boers at close range suffered terribly from the close and accurate fire of the Boers, who were able to seize some rocks on the slope, giving good cover.

10. With a moderate mounted force at my disposal it would not have been difficult to have rolled up the Boer right, which was dangerously extended and exposed. But the small mounted detachment under Major Brownlow, already reduced by casualties among the horses, was too weak for such an attempt. The level top of the plateau afforded no cover for our horses, and these in consequence suffered cruelly. The artillery, also exposed to a concentrated fire, lost so heavily that I found it necessary to withdraw the guns to a less exposed position, from which, however, they still fired shells occasionally when opportunity offered.

11. When it became evident that the attack was a serious and sustained one, and that reinforcements were coming to the Boers, I sent orders to camp for three companies of the 58th Regiment to move out and occupy the ridges over the Ingogo. Later in the afternoon, when it was clear that the enemy had no force in our left rear which could cut the reinforcements off from camp, I directed them to endeavour to push across the Ingogo towards us, holding, however, the spur immediately overhanging and commanding the Double Drift.

12. The action commenced a little after 12, and for some time the fire was very heavy. Towards 3, however, it began to slacken, and the enemy apparently abandoned the idea of trying to win the position, though a steady and very accurate fire was still maintained, any one at all exposing himself being almost certainly struck. Our men fired with great steadiness and coolness, husbanding their ammunition. Towards 4 o'clock the enemy could be seen removing his wounded from the field and collecting them at a point about a mile distant, and a little later began to draw off from our left front. About this time the Boer reinforcements, which had been dropping in during the afternoon, began to stream in in large numbers, and the attack on our right was for a time more vigorously renewed; but towards sundown the fire slackened on this side also, and the enemy withdrew and concentrated their forces in the valleys on our right. A movement made by a considerable body of Boers towards the Ingogo Drift, apparently with the object of intercepting our return to camp, was stopped by the appearance of the companies of the 58th on the ridge above the drift; and before dusk the fire had ceased altogether.

13. As I had not contemplated camping out, and had brought no supplies, and as the enemy was evidently preparing to renew the engagement with overwhelming numbers the following morning, I decided to withdraw to camp during the night. I was chiefly anxious about the guns, as the casualties among the horses had been so numerous that it seemed impossible to make up the necessary teams; but by withdrawing the team from the ammunition wagon, and collecting all available horses, we were able to horse, though insufficiently, the two guns.

14. As soon as it was dusk the fighting line was drawn in quietly, the guns run back, and the wounded collected. The severity of the fire had made it impossible in many cases to remove the wounded from the advanced positions; and the ambulances sent out had been unable to reach the plateau, the Boers having threatened to fire on them if they advanced while the engagement was going on. One wagon indeed which accompanied the column had been left at the foot of the hill, all the mules being killed, and the wagon riddled with bullets. All waterproof sheets, blankets, great coats, &c., were collected, and the wounded sheltered as well as they could be until the ambulances could be sent up.

15. The night closed in with dark clouds, heavy pelting showers, and occasional lightning; the moon from time to time breaking through the clouds and lighting up the country in drifting gleams. When all arrangements were completed the force moved off in silence in perfect order, arranged in a hollow square; the guns, &c., in the centre, the infantry in skirmishing order on the four sides. On approaching the Double Drift the column halted, and a patrol was sent out to ascertain that the drift was clear, and the column then filed across.

16. A heavy thunderstorm had now come on, the darkness was intense, and the river, swollen by the rains, was deep and rapid. Some of the first men trying to cross were swept down, but saved by a projecting sand bank. The rest were got over in detachments, holding hands. When all were across, the force resumed its march to camp, which it reached about 4 a.m.; the guns drawn up the hill by the 60th Rifles, the horses being unable to pull them up the steep and slippery road. The 58th companies remained in possession of the ridges commanding the drift until withdrawn the following day. The Officer Commanding the 58th had crossed the Ingogo as directed, but, as darkness came on before he could advance to our position, he rightly withdrew again, and concentrated his force on the hill immediately overlooking and commanding the Double Drift.

17. I enclose a return of the casualties, which, I regret to say, were severe. I have suffered a heavy personal loss (and the service generally has also suffered) in the death of Captain McGregor, R.E., my Assistant Military Secretary, a most promising officer, who would certainly have risen to distinction if spared, of soldierly bearing, of distinguished ability, and possessing in an eminent degree all the most valuable qualifications of a Staff Officer. He was killed early in the engagement, while pointing out the ground to Lieutenant Garrett, of the 60th, as the latter brought the company into action. I have also suffered, in common with the Civil Service and colony of Natal, by the death of Mr. M. Stuart, Resident Magistrate, of the Ixopo Division, and one of the ablest and most promising Civil servants of Natal—who was attached to my staff as Dutch interpreter.

18. In Captain Greer the Artillery has lost a gallant and valuable officer. Having volunteered and obtained leave from the Staff of Sir George Strahan, late Administrator of the Cape Colony, he organized and equipped a division of Field Artillery from guns in store at Durban, horses purchased at Newcastle, and a detachment of a Garrison Battery sent up from Cape Town; and rendered good service in command of the Artillery of the column. He was killed early in the engagement while directing the fire of his guns.

19. The 60th Rifles have lost two promising young officers in Lieutenant Garrett and 2nd Lieutenant O'Connell. The latter having been temporarily withdrawn from the fighting line with a few men to form a reserve, asked leave to rejoin his company, and was almost immediately killed. But the battalion has suffered a still heavier loss in the death of its adjutant, Lieutenant Wilkinson. Having distinguished himself through the engagement by his coolness and gallantry, volunteering for every difficult or dangerous task, he was drowned crossing the Ingogo after returning to the battle-field with assistance for the wounded. Of singularly winning disposition and manners, distinguished in all manly games, an excellent adjutant, and most promising officer, few men of his standing could boast so many and such warm friends, or be so widely missed and deeply mourned.

20. The conduct of all ranks throughout this trying day was admirable. After the death of Captain Greer, Lieutenant Parsons continued to direct the guns and assist in working them under a heavy fire until ordered to withdraw, having lost more than half of his detachment; and then, with the assistance of a few men of the 60th Rifles, again served the guns until severely wounded himself. The conduct of the men of the Royal Artillery well sustained the reputation of that corps. The comparatively young soldiers of the 60th Rifles behaved with the steadiness and coolness of veterans. At all times perfectly in hand, they held or changed their ground as directed without hurry or confusion, though under heavy fire, themselves fired steadily, husbanding their ammunition, and at the end of the day, with sadly reduced numbers, formed and moved off the ground with the most perfect steadiness and order; and finally, after 18 hours of continuous fatigue, readily and cheerfully attached themselves to the guns and dragged them up the long hill from the Ingogo, when the horses were unable to do so.

21. My thanks are due to Lieutenant-Colonel Ashburnham, 60th Rifles, for the manner in which he commanded his battalion, and the valuable assistance which he rendered me through the engagement; also to Major Brownlow, King's Dragoon Guards, for the manner in which he covered the advance of the force with the limited means at his disposal, and for his ever cool and ready help during the action. The Rev. Geo. M. Ritchie, Chaplain to the Forces, again distinguished himself, and honoured his office by his humane zeal, and indefatigable attention to the wounded, with whom he remained until late the following night, and until he had assisted at the burial of the dead. Major Essex, Column Staff Officer, and Lieutenant B. Hamilton, 15th Regiment, my aide-de-camp, rendered me active and valuable assistance throughout the day.

22. I desire especially to mention the conduct of Serjeant-Major T. Teole, R.A., who well seconded Captain Greer and Lieutenant Parsons in working the guns till the end of the action, and on whom the charge of the guns and the arrangements for their withdrawal devolved when the latter officer was wounded; also of Serjeant-Major Wilkins, 60th Rifles, who throughout the day was to be seen wherever the fire was hottest, setting an example to the men by his cool and steady shooting and cheerful gallantry.

23. Surgeon McGann well maintained the distinguished reputation of the Medical Department for self-sacrificing exposure in attendance on the wounded. Until the arrival of the ambulances, with Surgeons Ring and Landon, he was the only medical officer with the force, and laboured indefatigably with the wounded.

24. The wounded were all removed to the base hospital at Newcastle in the course of the following day, and the dead buried on the field by a burial party sent out under a flag of truce. The dead officers were brought in and buried here.

25. I sent to offer the Boer Commandant medical assistance for their wounded, but the offer, though most gratefully acknowledged, was not accepted. Later, however, they sent to ask permission for wagons, with their wounded, to pass through our lines. They were courteous in allowing all facilities for the removal of the wounded, but seemed surprised and disappointed to find that we were not still in the same position in the morning.

26. I regret to say that we had to leave one artillery ammunition wagon in the enemy's hands. Owing to the heavy casualties among the horses, it was not possible to do more than horse the two guns when we marched from the plateau. I sent out fresh artillery horses during the night, and they succeeded in bringing the wagon down to the Double Drift; but, by that time, the river had risen so high that it was impossible to get the wagon across; and finally it had to be emptied of its contents and abandoned, the artillery officer in charge, with his horses, making his way to Newcastle.

27. I estimated the force of the Boers at first engaged against us at about 300, afterwards increased by reinforcements to 800 or 1,000. Probably during the night their numbers were raised a good deal higher, as a continuous stream of reinforcements passed to them from the Laing's Neck, by a road leading round the back of the Umquelo mountain. Piet Joubert, the Commandant-General, and their "Field Commandant-General," Schmidt, were both present at the engagement. It is difficult to estimate their losses, which the Boers set down as small; but this is hardly consistent with the character of the engagement, or with the numbers that could be seen being removed from the field.

28. It is reported to me that Piet Joubert and a considerable part of the Boer force have returned to the Neck; that several hundred occupy a position between this and Newcastle, about 8 miles from the latter place; and that another party are working round Newcastle, with a view to intercept the approaching reinforcements on the Ingogani river. Reinforcements, consisting of the 15th Hussars, 2nd battalion 60th Rifles, 92nd Highlanders, and 2 guns Naval Brigade, are now between Ladysmith and the Biggarsberg; and I have ordered a concentration on the latter point, whence the united force will now move forward in one strong column.

I have, &c.,

Major-General.

"In a contrary case the vessels must undergo fifteen days' quarantine at Tor.

"All vessels that are permitted to go through the Canal in quarantine, and have passengers and goods for Egypt, shall, before entering the Canal, land them at Tor, where they will have to undergo the prescribed quarantine regulations.
