(2.) Shoal Ground and Beacons off Cape Steinort.

In consequence of a sunken danger having been reported to lie off the coast of Courland, bearing N.W. by compass distant 4 miles from Cape Steinort Beacon, and on which it was stated the British steam vessel "Coleridge" struck in the summer of 1881—an examination of the locality has been made by order of the Russian Government with the following results:—

It was ascertained that shoal ground did not exist in the position assigned by the Master of the S.S. "Coleridge;" and that from remains of the cargo thrown overboard at the place of grounding, the vessel struck on the shoal ground off Cape Steinort at three quarters of a mile from the shore.

In the course of the examination, a rock with 8 feet water over it was found (on the extremity of shoal water extending from Cape Steinort as marked on the chart) with Cape Steinort beacon bearing S. 38° E., distant one mile.

South-eastward of this rock the depths were found to be 10, 14, and 18 feet, afterwards decreasing gradually to the shore—north-westward of the rock, the soundings increase regularly.

Two perches, coloured black and white, and surmounted by brooms turned upwards, have been placed north-westward of the 8-foot rock in 6 fathoms water.
