THE Queen has been graciously pleased to confer the "Albert Medal of the Second Class" upon—

MR. FRANCIS PITTS, Chief Officer of the steamship "Pleiades," of Liverpool.

The following are the details of the heroic and gallant act for which the decoration has been conferred:—

At about 7 A.M., on the 30th May last, while the "Pleiades" was running before a very heavy south-westerly gale an able seaman was washed overboard. Three life buoys were at once thrown to him, and the engines slowed. Soon after the lookout man reported him to be on the starboard beam, but owing to the tremendous sea that was running the Master deemed it unsafe to lower a boat, and for the same reason it was impossible, without imperilling the ship, to turn her in the direction of the man.

The Master then, knowing MR. PITTS to be a fair swimmer, called upon him to attempt the rescue of the man by swimming to him with a line. Without a moment's hesitation MR. PITTS jumped overboard with the line, but after going about 300 yards he was obliged to let go the line and swim towards the ship. So great was the force of the waves that he was carried past the ship and was not rescued without much difficulty. When taken out of the sea he was quite exhausted.
