SEA OF JAPAN.

Non-existence of Waywoda Rock.

THE following information is published on the non-existence of Waywoda (Voevoda) Rock, in the Sea of Japan:—

This rock was originally reported by the Russian corvette "Voevoda," when proceeding from Hakodate to Peter the Great Bay. It was seen at a distance of three miles from the ship at 7h. P.M. on 28th June, 1859, during thick weather, and estimated to be about 12 feet above water; the position assigned by dead reckoning, being lat.  $42^{\circ} 16'$  N., long.  $137^{\circ} 18'$  E.

The rock was searched for on two occasions by French vessels of war without success prior to 1886. In September, 1886, eight of Her Majesty's ships passed near the assigned position of the rock, in such a manner that an area of 40 miles in latitude, and 62 miles in longitude, was examined, and no sign of the rock was observed.

In June, 1888, an American whaling barque reported having seen two rocks from 8 to 12 feet high, about 500 yards apart, in lat.  $42^{\circ} 30'$  N., long.  $137^{\circ} 5'$  E., or about 15 miles north-westward of the "Voevoda's" reported position.

Consequent on this latter report, a further special search has been made by five of Her Majesty's ships on the China station, throughout 7th September, 1889. During this search, the position of the rocks reported by the American whaling barque, as well as that of the Waywoda Rock, was passed over without seeing any signs of a rock above water, or obtaining any soundings indicative of shallow ground.

After a careful review of the above circumstances, it is considered that the objects seen by both the "Voevoda" and the American whaling barque were floating, and therefore the rock has been removed from the Admiralty Charts.

By command of their Lordships,
