Board of Trade (Harbour Department), London, July 30, 1892.

THE Board of Trade have received, through the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a copy of the following Notices issued by the Austro-Hungarian Government, respecting precautions against cholera :—

As regards warding off the danger of infection coming in by land, the Ministry of Commerce have hitherto confined themselves to ordering the administrations of those railways which come into consideration owing to their lines joining with those of Russia (i.e., the Imperial State Railways and the Kaiser Ferdinand's Nordbahr), to place the different localities in such a position as to enable the proper sanitary measures to be applied to travellers, and to supply and judiciously distribute the necessary stores of disinfecting apparatus and disinfecting substances. These administrations, and the postal authorities, were enjoined to assist as much possible in the prophylactic measures to be taken by the political authorities by order of the Imperial Ministry for the Interior.

In addition, negotiations have been begun by request of the Imperial Ministry of the Interior with the Imperial Finance Ministry and the Hungarian Ministry of Commerce, for the promulgation of a prohibition to import rags, linen that has been used on the person or in beds, &c., from Russia, similar to the one which already exists as regards imports from Asia.

This document is a reprint of an article in the weekly periodical called Das Oesterreichische Sanitatswesen, containing a Decree issued by the Austrian Minister of the Interior to the political authorities. It applies almost wholly to Galicia and Bukowina, those being the provinces bordering on Russia, and is aimed entirely at travellers coming into the country from Russia.

The authorities of Galicia and Bukowina are instructed to provide for the careful medical inspection of passengers and luggage on the Russian frontier, and especially at the frontier stations of Brody, Podwoloczyńska, and Szczakowa; any suspected case to be isolated and watched, all linen previously used to be disinfected, and all travellers to continue under medical surveillance for five days after entering Austria, where whether they may be and however healthy they may be. Steps are to be taken to acquire the services of a competent medical staff for the purpose, and proper appliances for isolating and disinfecting. The authorities are directed to provide for the possible outbreak of cholera by erecting temporary buildings, or arranging places suitable to serve as hospitals, and by providing a regular staff of doctors and nurses. They are also to do their utmost to keep the general health of the people good, and all are exhorted to co-operate heartily and promptly, without observing unnecessary formalities, which cause delay.

The authorities in all parts of the Empire are urged to see that innkeepers strictly observe the regulation about notifying new arrivals, and to keep a strict watch for the first five days over all persons coming from Russia.

The people in general are urged to co-operate as much as they can by observing strict cleanliness, by not over-crowding their dwellings, and by giving immediate notice to the authorities of any case they may discover of cholera nostras, or even disease of the bowels. The petty local authorities are enjoined to see that the water is not contaminated, that the sewage is satisfactorily disposed of, and also to watch over the sale of commodities in the markets.

Inquiries are to be made to discover what doctors would be willing to be despatched to places far away from their domiciles in case of cholera breaking out, and permission is granted to make use of the services of medical students and assistants in hospitals who have not yet established a regular practice.
