

where they posted themselves, and after this, the said Radziens being laden with their Boory, could not be obliged to advance farther towards the Enemy; upon which, the Count d' Aversperg caused some of the Germans who were putted for a Relieve, to enter into the place, and to set it on fire. On our side there were 50 killed and wounded, and of the Enemy about 500 who bore Arms, and in all with Women and Children above 500. The Beg of Giula escaped with much difficulty, but his Wife and Daughter were taken Prisoners with divers others, who all own that they had no knowledge of our design, farther than what they heard from a loose Report of some Enterprize that was intended against Jena. The Count d' Aversperg had before this Action sent our several Parties of Horse to destroy the Hay and Forage in the Neighbouring Villages, as well to prevent the Enemies carrying the same into the Castles of Giula and Jena, as to deprive them of the means of sending any Reliet to Great Warasin; The Necessities of which place increase every day; and 'tis said, that they has already happened a great difference between the new Bassa and the Agá of the Janissaries, and that the Garrison is resolved to Capitulate in case they do not receive very speedy Succors. The Enemy go on with their Preparations. The like is done on our side, and great Magazines are provided in our Frontier places. They write from Paris of the 4th instant, That the French King would set out towards Flanders about the 20th of this Month, and take his Journey by Villers Cotteretz, and that the Troops of the Household would begin their march some days before.

Hague, Feb. 8. The last Letters from Flanders say, that there had fallen so much Snow, as made the ways almost unpassable. They tell us likewise, that a Distemper was got among the Horses of the French Troops, of which a great number had died lately, and that it still encreased.
