Rocky Point—Relief-Station Established.

Subject.—A station for the relief of shipwrecked mariners has been established about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles inland from Rocky Point, west coast of Tasmania.

Position.—Rocky Point, lat. $43^{\circ} 00' S.$, long. $145^{\circ} 30' E.$

Description.—The Relief-station is a frame structure, painted red, plainly visible from seaward; a signal staff for signalling to passing vessels has been erected on Rocky Point. A track has been cut from the signal staff on Rocky Point to the Relief-station. From the Relief-station, a track has been cut to the northward for a distance of about 8 miles to a point abreast of the wreck of the Acacia, and to the southward there is a track as far as the north head of Port Davey. These tracks follow the coast line, and are nowhere more than one mile distant from it; in 11 places junction tracks have been cut from the shore to the main track. At every quarter of a mile on the main track, iron index hands have been erected, pointing in the direction of the Relief-station and indicating the distance from it. A raft has been constructed at the Giblin River, where the depth of water is too great to permit fording. In the building a sufficient supply of clothing, provisions, and cooking utensils has been placed, with all necessary directions, and mariners wrecked on the coast in this vicinity will have no difficulty in finding their way to the Relief-station, from whence by means of the signal station any passing vessel may be notified of their presence.
