Portland Harbour—Pilotage; Caution.

Subject.—The undermentioned information with regard to the pilotage of vessels entering Portland Harbour should be inserted in the Admiralty Sailing Directions.

Position.—Portland Harbour, lat.  $50^{\circ} 35'$  N., long.  $2^{\circ} 25'$  W.

Pilots.—Pilotage is compulsory, except in such cases as are specially exempted by the Merchant Shipping Act. Two Trinity House Pilots are stationed at Portland. They are generally to be found cruising off the entrance to the East Ship Channel; in fine weather they may be further out, and in very bad weather they take shelter within the breakwater. Strangers should always take a pilot, as owing to Portland Harbour being a dockyard port the anchorage is restricted by men-of-war and the torpedo range; also, there are many local regulations which have to be complied with. Strangers entering the port by day or night should pick up a pilot off the Eastern or Northern Entrance. It is not safe, as a rule, for strangers to use any of the entrances at night, owing to the number of men-of-war usually anchored within the harbour; and also owing to the glare of the numerous electric lights.

Caution.—Numerous buoys exist inside the harbour for various naval purposes, also rafts and buoys for the torpedo range; as none of these are lighted, they cannot be avoided at night unless with local knowledge or with the assistance of a pilot.

Publication.—Channel Pilot, Part I, 1908, pages 151, 155.

Authority.—King's Harbour Master, Portland.
