Whitehall, June 13, 1910.

The following Address was presented to His Majesty at St. James's Palace, on the 9th instant:---

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Address of the President, Council and Fellows of the Royal Society of London for Promoting Natural Knowledge.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the President, Council and Fellows of the Royal Society of London for Promoting Natural Knowledge, humbly beg leave to offer our most heartfelt sympathy with Your Majesty in the great and sudden sorrow which has befallen You in the death of Your universally beloved and revered Father, our late Sovereign, King Edward VII.

Your Majesty's loss is mourned by the whole Empire and by the wide world beyond. We desire to express not only our keen share in the universal grief, but our sense of personal bereavement; for we are proud to remember that no less than forty-seven years ago The King was graciously pleased to enter the Fellowship of the Royal Society, and later, on His accession to the Throne, to become our Patron. In the cultivation of the arts of peace wherein His Majesty was so active and so successful, He recognised that among these arts the development of Science holds a high place, and that the promotion of Natural Knowledge, for which the Royal Society was founded by one of His Royal Ancestors, was an object ever worthy of His fostering care. We mourn that a life so beneficent should have closed so soon.

While thus seeking to express our profound sorrow, we ask leave, Sire, at the same time to lay at Your Majesty's feet our unfeigued and cordial congratulations upon Your accession to the Throne of Your Ancestors. Your Majesty enters upon the duties of Your bigh station with a wider personal knowledge of the Empire and its various peoples than was ever possessed by any previous Sovereign of this country. Your subjects have had many proofs that this extended knowledge has been accompanied by an active sympathy with every cause and movement that will promote their welfare and happiness. The interest which Your Majesty has shown in the progress of discovery and invention
