Whitehall, May 23, 1912.

The following Address was presented to the King on Tuesday, the 21st instant, when His Majesty, accompanied by the Queen, opened the new building of the Royal Society of Medicine in Wimpole Street:—

To the King's and the Queen's Most Excellent Majesties.

May it please Your Majesties,

We, the President, Council, and Fellows of the Royal Society of Medicine, desire to convey to Your Majesties, with our loyal duty, our attachment and devotion to Your Persons and to the Throne.

We take this opportunity to express our grateful appreciation of the deep interest which Your Majesties invariably evince in all that concerns the well-being of Your Subjects, and in the progress of our profession, whose duty it is not only to preserve the individual by curing disea-- but to improve the health of the Nation by promoting Hygiene, and preventing illness.

Our Society was founded in 1805, but greater stability and effect were given to its designs by the Charter granted in 1834 by the special grace of His Majesty King William IV, who thereby declared himself, "and his successors if they shall think fit," the Patron of the Society.

It is our pride and privilege to record that each of the illustrious Successors of King William IV have so thought fit, and that our greatly beloved and never-to-be-forgotten late Sovereigns, Her Majesty Queen Victoria and His Majesty King Edward VII, have been, and now Your own most excellent Majesty is our Patron.

By a Supplementary Charter graciously granted in 1907 by Your Majesty's august Father, the Society was empowered to enrol as Fellows the Members of several younger Societies having allied objects; the powers of the Society were enlarged, its name was
