TUESDAY, 24 MARCH, 1914.

Whitehall, March 23, 1914.

The following Address was presented to the King on Thursday, the 19th instant, when His Majesty, accompanied by the Queen, opened the new buildings of the National Institute for the Blind in Great Portland Street:—

To Their Most Excellent Majesties the King and Queen.

The Loyal and Dutiful Address of the Executive Council of the NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR THE BLIND.

May it please Your Majesties,

The Institute which Your Majesties graciously honour with Your presence here to-day was founded by that generous and ardent friend of the blind, the late Dr. T. R. Armitage, whose daughter we rejoice to claim as a devoted member of the Council. The name selected for the Institute at its foundation, and by which it has hitherto been known, was "The British and Foreign Blind Association." For weighty reasons it has been agreed to change its name, and after mature deliberation it has been decided that for the future, reckoning from this auspicious day, its name shall be "The National Institute for the Blind." It is proposed that the room in which we are now assembled be named "The Armitage Hall," in memory of one who deserves to be remembered with gratitude by every blind person in the Empire.

The chief objects which our founder aimed at were the printing of books in embossed type for the use of the blind, and the employment, as far as possible, of blind persons in the production of those books. Fortunately, after a careful and prolonged inquiry, Dr. Armitage's choice of a type fell upon that system of embossed dots which is generally known as "Braille," from the name of its author, the blind Frenchman, Louis Braille, the centenary of whose birth was celebrated with enthusiasm by the blind throughout the world four years ago. This is the type that is now used exclusively by a very large majority of Your Majesties' blind subjects. The demand for books in this type is incessant; we are called upon to produce books embracing religion and science, history and fiction, travel and biography; and, not the least important, music, by means of which a very large number of the blind earn their livelihood.

Without wishing in the slightest degree to disparage the work done by other institutions, we claim with confidence that ours is by far the largest and most important printing press of embossed literature in the Empire. We are very proud of the amount of work which we have been able to produce, and of the great improvement in the quality of that work which has been effected in the last decade; but we are quite unable, with our present resources, to cope with the increasing demands made upon us. It might be thought that a large output would bring in large profits, but this is not so. As most of our readers are in far from affluent circumstances every volume is sold at a price below the cost of production. It is our pleasant duty, however, to point out to Your Majesties the kind liberality of authors and publishers alike, who, almost without exception, readily consent to works of which they possess the copyright being embossed and published by us.

The difficulties surrounding the Institute led the Council a few years ago to realise the necessity of obtaining larger premises and improved plant. We hope that the new building which Your Majesties are opening to-day will, when completed and adequately equipped, fully deserve to be known as the Blind Man's Press. We feel that any check to the legitimate attempt of the Council to meet the growing requirements of the English-speaking blind would be a most deplorable calamity for every blind man, woman, and child.

The Council were emboldened to enter upon their undertaking of a new building by the munificent gift of £10,000 from an anonymous donor, and by other contributions from liberal friends. We still want some £30,000 to complete and equip the new building, and as much in addition to form an endowment fund as a generous public will afford. That we shall obtain an ample sum we trust with confidence to the generosity of the public, for who can be blind to the needs of the blind?

The Lord Mayor of London has promised to open a Mansion House Subscription List to further this purpose, and many large employers of labour have already agreed to subscription lists being opened to enable work-people to help their poorer brethren who do not enjoy the blessing of sight. We are confident that the greater efficiency of this Institute tends to increase the happiness and welfare of the blind not only in the United Kingdom, but also in Your Majesties' Dominions beyond the seas.

On behalf of all of them, we beg leave to thank Your Majesties for Your gracious presence here to-day.

A. W. G. RANGER,
Chairman of the Council.

HENRY STAINSBY,
Secretary-General.

19th March, 1914.

To which Address His Majesty was pleased to return the following gracious answer:—

The Queen and I were very happy to accept your invitation to open these new buildings, and we have listened with deep interest to the Address which has been read to Us.

We join heartily in the tribute you have paid to Dr. Armitage, and are glad that his work should be so fittingly commemorated in the name of this Hall. There is no sadder affliction than that which closes to the blind one great channel of common experience and common intercourse, and cuts off the sufferers from the chief fields of knowledge and activity. A great service was rendered to humanity when Louis Braille devised the system of reading and writing which partially restores to the blind the lost means of intercourse with their fellows, and gives them freer access to the world of literature, of science, and of music. This discovery, like so many others, we owe to France, but it has been the distinction of Dr. Armitage and of your Society to develop the work which Braille began, and to give the Bible, the works of Shakespeare, and a rich store of literature and science to the blind throughout Our Empire.

We rejoice that your work, which has brought solace and hope into many lives, has met with such a response that the enlargement of its scope has now become necessary; and We wish you all success in your efforts to bring increased advantages to a yet greater number of Our blind subjects. It is a commonplace that men do not realise the value of that which they have never lost, but I am confident that your appeal for funds to extend and develop your undertaking will stir the imagination of many who unreflectingly enjoy the blessing of sight.

I am happy to learn that the Lord Mayor of London will open a Mansion House Subscription List to further your objects, and I cannot too strongly urge upon all the duty of showing practical sympathy with your devoted efforts to break down as far as may be the barriers which shut out the blind from a full share in the common interests and pleasures of life.

We hope that you will speedily be relieved of all anxiety on the score of funds, and We wish God-speed to the work of the National Institute for the Blind.
