

He and his first wife came to England shortly after the marriage, and afterwards went to Australia, where they lived for several years. They then returned to Europe, and set up an hotel at Havre, France. Afterwards they went to America to prosecute a claim which the wife had against the Government of the State of Texas. About 1860 the said William Huntley Mills went into business with a wine merchant at Ghent, and about that time went to Spain for the purposes of his business. Shortly afterwards his said wife is believed to have left Belgium for Spain in a sailing vessel which was never heard of after she left port. It is believed there was no issue of this first marriage.
