

move. Though wounded, he continued to advance with his battalion until the final objective was reached—a distance of about 5,000 yards. He did not hand over command of his battalion until 11 a.m., in the neighbourhood of Krubstraat. He showed great courage and devotion to duty.

Capt. Geoffrey Charles Keighley, Norf. R., Spec. Res., attd. 2nd Bn.

(MESOPOTAMIA)

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty, near Baku, on 26th August, 1918. By his fine personal courage and example he managed to keep a local regiment of poor material in the firing-line for several hours, under most difficult circumstances. He only quitted the position when wounded and the whole regiment had withdrawn.

2nd Lt. Bernard Kelly, Worc. R., Spec. Res., attd. 2nd Bn.

On the night of 25th/26th October, 1918, during the attack on the village of Englefontaine, he located an enemy machine gun which was sweeping the road along which the company was advancing. He rushed forward with a small party, captured the gun and two of the crew, and killed two more of the crew. By his fine act of courage he enabled the company to advance along the road with very few casualties and gain its final objective.

For great gallantry and devotion to duty. On 24th October, 1918, at Monchaux, he seeing that a frontal attack on the village was impossible, took ten men to the left, and accompanied by Lieut. Raynor entered the village, which was subsequently found to hold over 100 enemy and many machine guns. He was mainly instrumental in capturing an enemy officer, through whom the enemy were made to surrender.

T./Lt. Leonard Maurice Kennard, R.A.S.C., attd. 6th Bn., R.W. Kent. R.

For marked gallantry and devotion to duty. On 21st September, 1918, near Epehy, he conducted attacks against the enemy almost continuously for twenty-four hours. Though continually counter-attacked, he always returned to the attack and immediately regained any ground lost. He finally drove the enemy out of 800 yards of trench in face of the most obstinate resistance.

T./Lt. John Davis Kennedy, 8th Bn., Tank Corps.

At Bellicourt, on 29th September, 1918, for conspicuous skill and devotion to duty as company reconnaissance officer. During the advance he reconnoitred the best route for his Tanks, going on ahead many times under heavy machine-gun fire, returning and personally directing the column. His performance, in thick fog and under heavy fire, was an outstanding feature of the day.

Capt. John Gould Kennedy, 13th Bn., R. Highrs., T.F.

South of Le Cateau, on the 17th of October, 1918, he was in command of a company. He showed great skill and gallantry throughout the operations, particularly in personally leading an attack upon a mound, where there were many enemy machine guns sweeping an open space. By his action he materially assisted the success of a most difficult operation, resulting in the capture of the Le Cateau Station, without which the general plan of the main attack could not have succeeded.

T./2nd Lt. Patrick Gilbert Kennedy, M.G. Corps (Motor). (MESOPOTAMIA.)

For conspicuous gallantry and good work at Baladjari, near Baku, on 14th September, 1918. When the enemy had pushed back the troops on his left and were working round behind him, he held on to his position, and brought a deadly fire from his machine gun to bear on them. His determined stand greatly facilitated the withdrawal of the troops on his right. He quickly took up a second position, whence he was able to give effective covering fire to the troops who were withdrawing.

2nd Lt. Sydney Cardigan Killender, 1/5th Bn., L'pool R., T.F.

For conspicuous gallantry and able leadership at Don on night 14th/15th October, 1918, when he participated in a successful raid on the enemy lines. He was in command of a party which captured an enemy post consisting of an officer and fourteen other ranks. This post he had located the previous night on patrol. The party had to make its way through uncut wire and difficult defences.

T./Lt. James King, R. Innis. Fus., attd. 1st Bn.

At Dries, on 20th October, 1918, he personally led three attacks against the village, which was strongly held by the enemy, his leading being an inspiring example of pluck in the face of superior numbers. It was entirely due to his persistent endeavours that all the wounded in his company were successfully recovered. Throughout the operations 19th-27th October he commanded a company with great skill and determination.

T./Lt. Spencer Walpole Kinred, 35th Bn., M.G. Corps.

On 18th October, 1918, he, accompanied by a N.C.O., crossed the Lys south of Marcke and made a daring reconnaissance into Marcke. He entered the enemy lines, penetrating to a depth of 200 yards, and gained information about the strength of the enemy and means of approach to the village and means of crossing the river. The information brought back by him was invaluable to the infantry, who crossed the river and captured Marcke the same evening. He has previously done good work.

T./Lt. Herbert Randles Kinsley, K.R.R.C., attd. 16th Bn., attd. H.Q., 100th Inf. Bde.

For conspicuous gallantry and good work. At Englefontaine, on the night of 24th/25th October, 1918, he carried out a valuable reconnaissance of the enemy's outpost line, and succeeded in closely locating his advanced posts. Later, he was severely
