The following Address was presented to The KING on the occasion of the opening by His Majesty on the 18th instant of Ken Wood.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.

TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

The Loyal and Dutiful Address of the Council of the Administrative County of London.

May it Please Your Majesty:—

We, the Chairman, Aldermen and Councillors of the London County Council, representing the people of the capital of Your Majesty's Empire, humbly desire to express our warmest thanks for Your Majesty's presence on this occasion and to ask that Your Majesty will be pleased to dedicate the park known as Ken Wood, in which we are now assembled, to the use of the public.

The private ownership of Ken Wood dates back many centuries. The earliest owner who can be identified with certainty was William de Blemund, the younger, who flourished in the early part of the reign of King Henry III; and it is probable that at least some of the land formed part of the Manor of Tottenham which William Blemund acquired from John Bocointe in the third year of the reign of King John (1201-2). Bocointe was a member of a well-known London family of Italian origin, and the Blemunds were in the front rank of London civic life.

About the year 1226, the property passed into ecclesiastical ownership, in which it remained, more or less, for over 300 years. From 1540 onwards, the estate continued to change hands at frequent intervals, and in 1754, it was acquired by "the Hon. William Murray, Esq., H.M. Attorney-General," who afterwards became the Earl of Mansfield.
