His Majesty The KING has been graciously pleased to award the Edward Medal to John Samuel Mathias, in recognition of his gallantry in the following circumstances:—

On the 18th March, 1935 at the pumping station of the National Oil Refineries at Queen's Dock, Swansea, a workman went down into a drainage chamber connected with pipes through which oil is pumped from ships to storage tanks on shore, and was overcome by fumes. He fell unconscious into oil which had collected to a depth of two feet at the bottom of the chamber. Mathias went down into the chamber without a gas mask and tried to effect a rescue; but he had to return to fresh air when on the point of collapse. Mathias recovered sufficiently to go down a second time; but although he was able to catch hold of the unfortunate workman, he was again forced to give up the attempt at rescue because of the poisonous gases in the chamber. Had he been successful, the life of the first workman, whose body was recovered somewhat later, might have been saved. The coroner and jury at the inquest warmly commended Mathias's bravery.
