For the rest of the day he remained at the head of his squadron in a series of fierce battles over the island. He has destroyed at least 4 enemy aircraft and damaged many more.

This officer has commanded a flight since the squadron was formed. He has performed much valuable work both during the training of the squadron and in its operational activities. Acting Flight Lieutenant Hugh Anthony Stephen JOHNSTON (88723), Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve, No. 126 Squadron.

One day in April, 1942, Flight Lieutenant Johnston showed great courage and initiative when, after a prolonged fight against a numerically superior force and having expended all his ammunition, he carried out a series of successful feint attacks on Messerschmitt 109's to allow his squadron colleagues to land safely. This officer has displayed great determination in his encounters with raiding aircraft. One day in April, 1942, he shot down a Junkers 87 and damaged another in 1 combat. Having expended all his ammunition, he carried out a series of feint attacks on Messerschmitt 109's and drove them away from some of his comrades who were coming in to land their aircraft.

Regardless of a fierce defensive barrage which, in the full light of the morning, was extremely accurate, Pilot Officer Paige pressed home his attack. Although he was seriously wounded by a splinter from a shell which smashed through the instrument panel, this officer courageously flew his aircraft back to base. Some few nights earlier, Pilot Officer Paige made a successful attack on a large enemy vessel from a height of only 75 feet.

On 17th April, 1942, Flying Officer Garwell, Warrant Officer Kirke and Sergeants Dando and Watson were members of the crew of a Lancaster aircraft which took part in the daring daylight attack on Augsburg, involving a flight of some 1,000 miles across enemy territory. Soon after crossing the enemy's coast their aircraft was damaged in a running fight with 25 to 30 enemy fighters. Despite this they pressed on until the target area was reached. In the face of fierce and accurate anti-aircraft fire which further damaged the bomber and set it on fire the bombs were released on the objective. The task accomplished, it was necessary to make a forced landing in a field some 2 miles from the target. In the most harassing circumstances this very gallant crew displayed great fortitude and skill which has set a magnificent example.
