Whitehall, May 26, 1944.

The KING has been pleased to award the Edward Medal to John Weller Brown, in recognition of his gallantry in the following circumstances:—

When a violent explosion took place at an ammunition railhead Mr. Brown was in a hut

40 yards away. The hut collapsed and he was blown a considerable distance. The explosion was followed immediately by extensive fires in the surrounding area, caused mainly by grenades and incendiary bombs scattered from adjoining trucks. Mr. Brown, though badly shaken, returned to the hut, which was already on fire. He was joined by another man, who, though injured himself, was able to assist him to extricate three other injured men from the ruins of the hut and to carry them to safety. They then assisted in the rescue of killed and injured from other burning and wrecked buildings. Mr. Brown continued the work until emergency parties had arrived and taken over the work of rescue and fire fighting.

Mr. Brown well knew that the area contained other loads of high explosives which might well have exploded. His behaviour showed courage, initiative and determination of a high order.
