

setting off another mine, he, without hesitation, entered the area and traversed a distance of about twenty yards of "live" mines to attend the wounded man.

He ordered the signallers not to enter the area and sent them to a nearby Regimental Aid Post to collect a stretcher bearer party and guide it back to the minefield.

Having done all he possibly could for the wounded N.C.O., pending the arrival of the stretcher, he carefully retraced his steps to the minefield boundary to mark a safe route for the party. Once again he had to pass through twenty yards of "live" mines.

As a result of this careful direction and leadership the severely wounded N.C.O. was speedily evacuated.

The action of Corporal LOWES in deliberately entering a minefield to succour a wounded comrade was a demonstration of cold, calculated courage of the highest order as he was fully aware of the gravity of his act and realised only too clearly that he may well have suffered a similar, if not worse fate than the man he was attempting to save.

This is not an isolated incident for on the 16th September, 1952, he attended the wounds of a man lying in an exposed position while the "D" Troop area was being shelled, and undoubtedly on that occasion contributed greatly to the speedy removal of a badly wounded man.

Throughout Corporal LOWES's attachment to the 61 Light Regiment, Royal Regiment of Artillery, he has reflected the greatest credit on himself and the Corps which he so ably represents.
