STATE INTELLIGENCE

Home Office,
Whitehall, London S.W.1.
10th November 1960.

On the occasion of the visit to Oxford on Friday, 4th November, of Her Majesty The QUEEN, who was accompanied by His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, the Chancellor of the University and the Public Orator of the University delivered the following Addresses at a Special Convocation in the Sheldonian Theatre.

The Chancellor said:

Madam, it gives me personally the greatest pleasure, as Your Majesty's First Minister, to have the double honour of being here today in my other and more secure capacity as Chancellor of the University—to welcome Your Majesty and Your Royal Highness on behalf of the University. But for the timely intervention of Prince Andrew, I believe that your visit might have taken place at some earlier time, before I had the good fortune to be elected Chancellor. The postponement, for reasons which delighted us all, has brought me the welcome duty of presiding over Convocation on this historic occasion. I shall add my own tribute to the Public Orator's and shall—alas—mark the decline in learning by venturing to underline in the vernacular some of the sentiments so admirably expressed by him in the Latin tongue.

As the Public Orator has recalled, the last time on which Your Majesty visited Oxford was when you accepted in this very place a Doctorate of Civil Law conferred by Diploma. But this is the first occasion on which we, in this University, have been able to welcome Your Majesty since your Accession to the Throne. We are delighted to welcome also on this occasion Your Royal Highness The Duke of Edinburgh whose association with Oxford as an Honorary Fellow of University College is already close and we hope may become closer.

The last occasion on which a reigning Sovereign visited Oxford was in October 1946 when King George VI, accompanied by Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother, came here to open the New Bodleian. The New Bodleian, for which the University owes so much to the Rockefeller Foundation, has ceased to be the solitary portent which it then appeared, and on this occasion Your Majesty will see a whole crop of new buildings in various styles, in various stages of development, serving a great variety of scientific and even occasionally humanistic purposes. In addition, Your Majesty will be very conscious, as any visitor to Oxford must be, of all that is being done with the help of the Historic Buildings Appeal, not least in this building itself in which we are now and in the neighbouring buildings, Duke Humphrey's Library and the Divinity School.

Your Majesty's present visit springs in large measure from the interest which Your Majesty has expressed in the education of women at Oxford. Women students are increasing. In 1939 there were 876 in residence—today there are 1,221. They've never had it so good. Last year women's colleges received the full status of colleges and the Principal of Lady Margaret Hall, whom you will meet, Madam, later this afternoon, has been appointed Oxford's first woman Pro-Vice-Chancellor.

The new College of St. Anne's which Your Majesty will visit is rapidly assuming the same residential character as its four predecessors. Having completed its library, common rooms and hall, it is now in a position, thanks to a recent and most generous benefaction, to make a start with its first residential block.

I am informed by statisticians that more women graduates are marrying, and women as a whole are marrying younger. There is at the same time an increasing need for women graduates in the professions. This enhances the need for University education for women. If I may be allowed to say so without impertinence the art of combining public with family life is one in which Your Majesty sets us all a shining example.

This afternoon Your Majesty will lay the foundation stone of St. Catherine's College in Holywell Great Meadow. This, like other colleges, will be residential in character. Half its undergraduates will be reading science and there will be a considerably higher proportion of scientists upon the governing body. But I have been instructed to say that humanists will be tolerated, even welcomed.

This is a great day for us, a memorable day, and we hope it will be an interesting one for Your Majesty and Your Royal Highness. We thank you for coming to spend the day with us and we ask you from our hearts to accept the expression of our loyalty and affection.

The Public Orator said:

Regina Augustissima, certa Britannici nominis copula, tuque, Dux Excelsissime, validum uxoris regnique adminiculum; nequiquam disputant viri eruditi quid sibi velit 'pseudo-Lucilianum illud quo regibu' trullam?

nesciebat videlicet poeta fore ut manu regia novorum aedificiorum fundamenta iacerentur, sed probe cognoverat bonis seu civibus seu regibus laudes immodicas non placere. quanto tamen studio, quanto gaudio vos excipiamus huc reversos, e plausibus Oxoniensium apparet. quae enim Principissa abhinc duodecim annis apud nos benigne gradum Doctoris accepit, eandem summa auctoritate, dignissimo coniuge, tribus liberis auctam hodie salutamus. teque, Dux Excelsissime, quem non terrestri tantum itinere advectum vidimus, factum iam honoris causa Socium, Aulae Magnae Universitatis tota nunc Academia prosequitur.

Neminem fallit quanta vos assiduitate, quanta gratia creberrima domi forisque praestetis officia; hunc autem diem sic nobis destinando clare demonstratis quantopere hoc sit vobis cordi ut optime instituat iuventus, praecipueque ut viris doctis doctae feminae, ut veteribus doctrinis recentes accedant.

Itaque nos Oxonienses et affirmamus nos voluntates regias fideliter observatos esse, et speramus vos tantum nobis honorem oblectamentumque impertiendo non nullam et ipsos percepturos voluptatem.

Omnibus denique precibus optamus ut Dominus Deus rem Britannicam custodiat atque conservet, et ipsi Reginae totique Domui Regiae diuturnam largiatur felicitatem.

Of which the following is the English translation:

Your Majesty the Queen, sure bond of the British peoples, and you, my Lord Duke, strong support of your Wife and the Throne; it is to no purpose that scholars dispute about that pseudo-Lucilian fragment:

For kings no trowels.

Doubtless the poet did not know that one day royal hands would lay foundation-stones, but he was well aware that good kings and good subjects alike reject immoderate praises. Yet it is obvious from the applause of Oxford with what joyful enthusiasm we welcome you here again. Twelve years ago a Princess graciously accepted from us the degree of Doctor of Civil Law; today we greet a Queen and her Consort, parents of three children. As for you, my Lord Duke, whom we have seen arriving here not only by road or rail, University College has already made you an Honorary Fellow, and now our whole body salutes you.

Everyone knows with what conscientiousness and charm you both perform your numerous duties at home and abroad; but by thus spending this day among us you clearly show how much you have at heart the training of the rising generation, and particularly the addition of educated women to educated men, the addition of new forms of learning to old.

So we in Oxford declare that we will loyally carry out our Queen's wishes, and we hope that while you confer on us by your visit such honour and delight you will yourselves find pleasure.

Finally we make our heart-felt prayer that Almighty God will protect and preserve the Realm, and on the Queen herself and on all the Royal Family will bountifully bestow lasting felicity.

To which Addresses Her Majesty was pleased to return the following gracious Answer:

Mr. Chancellor:

I thank you and the Public Orator for your speeches and all the University for the warm affection with which I and my husband have been received today. The Public Orator was kind enough to let me have a translation of his speech, for alas my knowledge of Latin would not have enabled me to appreciate the kindness of his words. When, four hundred years ago, my predecessor visited the University she was so learned in the classics that she could converse with your predecessor, Mr. Chancellor, in Latin and Greek. We are, however, in a scientific and technological age and very significantly the University has decided no longer to require of all entrants a knowledge of Latin, once the language of humanism and the link between nations, as a condition of admission.

I am particularly glad to be in the Sheldonian Theatre again, where before I was honoured with an Oxford degree. As I came in I was impressed with the great work of restoration and repair which has been undertaken so successfully with the help of the Historic Buildings Appeal. Here in Oxford where so much building is going on it would be a tragedy if the beauty of the past with its fine traditions were lost through material decay. We are grateful to all who contributed to the Appeal and congratulate those who have taken part in the work of restoration. All who love Oxford are thankful to the architects, engineers and craftsmen for the art and skill which they have brought to their tasks.

But respect for tradition must not blind us to the need for change. I want therefore to pay my tribute to the contribution which the University has made and is making in this scientific age to the solution of the problem of training and equipping men and women in its many faculties to serve the State and the Nation in the years that are ahead.

Oxford is an international centre of thought and learning which attracts, as it has done all over the centuries, teachers and scholars from all over the world. I am sure that when they return home they will all the more be able to make a significant contribution to the life of their native lands.

I listened with great interest, Mr. Chancellor, to what you said about the women members of the University. I was delighted to learn that women's colleges now have the full status of Colleges and I am sure that the male members of the University will join me in congratulating the women members on their magnificent record in the schools.

It is, I hope, now generally accepted that women have as much right as men to be educated, and generally acknowledged that their education will be of great value to the community. There is much need for them in the professions, and who can doubt that a mother and her children will be the better for it if she has a cultivated mind?

Nor need a woman barter her intellectual life for the happiness and deep satisfaction of bringing up a family. Nowadays she can keep the one without endangering her chances of enjoying the other. Such women are often the happiest of all.

I thank the University for all that it has done and is doing in the work of training some of the outstanding young men and women from all parts of the Commonwealth who will, in due time, share the responsibility for the fortunes of our great family of nations and I am sure that throughout the years Oxford will never fail to make its most valuable contribution to the advancement of learning and to the development of the highest qualities of those who come under its especial and particular influence.
