Short Particulars of the Decision

In respect of performances of copyright music in cinemas, the Performing Right Society grant licences in accordance with the provisions of what is known as "Tariff C".

Although that tariff is in substance of general application, it incorporates by reference certain special agreements which the Society has made with two separate associations of cinematograph exhibitors, through which the individual members of those associations obtain certain privileges, mainly by way of discounts from the licence fees payable by them.

The older and by far the larger of the two associations is the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association of Great Britain and Ireland (known as the "C.E.A."). The other, originally a breakaway association from the C.E.A., is the Association of Independent Cinemas Ltd. (known as the "A.I.C."), which referred the dispute to the Tribunal. The C.E.A. joined in the reference as an "Interested Party."

Shortly, the complaint of the A.I.C. was that, as a result of the operation of a scale of discounts related to the size of membership, members of the C.E.A. obtained, without (it was argued) any merit of their own, a substantial advantage over the members of the A.I.C.

The question, therefore, for the Tribunal was whether such discrimination could be justified. What was said in support of it was that an organisation of the size and influence of the C.E.A. was of such commercial value to the Performing Right Society as to merit specially favourable terms. But the Tribunal considered that, while that might once have been true, when the industry was rapidly expanding, it could now no longer be justified; whereas its effect on recruitment of members to the A.I.C. was calculated to operate unfairly. It had an even greater penal effect on those independent exhibitors who wished to belong to neither association and consequently qualified for no discount at all.

The total abolition of discounts, however, would only have the effect of giving an unsought bonus to the Society, at the expense of all but the few independent exhibitors. On the other hand, there was no case for reducing the total fees recoverable from the industry by the Society.

It seemed accordingly to the Tribunal that justice could be met by making an all-round allowance from the gross fee arrived at on the basis of a formula which was already in satisfactory operation, calculated so as to produce, as nearly as possible, the same net receipts as the Society was already collecting.

This result was achieved by fixing the allowance at 7 per cent. That represented a net gain of 7 per cent. for the small number of independent exhibitors, a gain of 2 per cent. for the members of the A.I.C., neither a gain nor a loss for the Performing Right Society, and all at the cost of no more than  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. diminution in the amount hitherto enjoyed by the members of the C.E.A. by way of discount.

The same minimum fee of six guineas (other than for concerts, for which there had always been a minimum of two guineas, and which still holds good) was fixed for every exhibitor.

Each party was left to bear its own costs.

A copy of the Decision may be inspected at the offices of the Tribunal, 24 Kingsway, London W.C.2, during office hours.
