Following a series of burglaries in the surrounding countryside an intensive search was made for the criminal who was known to be dangerous. At about 3 a.m. Constable Rowlands, who was patrolling in the vicinity of some lonely cottages, suddenly came upon the criminal who was carrying a sawn-off shotgun. The man pointed the gun straight at Rowlands' face and threatened to shoot him. Although only two yards away from the pointed gun the Constable advanced unflinchingly towards the man, at the same time trying to reason with him. As Rowlands moved forward the criminal fired at point-blank range, full into his face. The Constable was terribly injured but in spite of the agonising pain, being blinded in both eyes, his face covered by multiple wounds, and losing much blood, P.C. Rowlands remained conscious on his hands and knees and tried to voice an alarm. His mouth and teeth had been smashed by the gunshot but he did not spare himself and was able to provide an accurate description of his attacker. Constables Roberts and Carswell took up the chase and followed a trail through a valley until Roberts saw the criminal, still holding the gun, run for cover of some bushes. Roberts immediately ran after him and fearlessly approached although threatened by the gun. When only a few yards separated them the criminal fired but the Constable ducked and the shots smashed into the boughs above his head. The man then ran off and Roberts followed. Meanwhile Carswell had gone ahead with a police dog in an attempt to cut off the escape. He released the dog which ran towards the armed man. When the dog was a few yards away the gunman shot it in the head. Carswell attempted to reach the man who threatened to shoot him and as the Constable came forward fired directly at him. Carswell threw himself to one side and the shots flew over his head. The gunman then jumped on a bicycle which was lying nearby and rode away. Constable Davies, who had been in the front of the chase, made a final effort to capture the mad gunman. He jumped into a police car and caught up with him on a small bridge. The car hit the rear wheel of the bicycle and threw the rider but he regained his feet and withdrew the shotgun from its holster. Before he could fire it Constable Davies threw himself at his legs and brought him down. There followed a terrific struggle during which the deranged man tried to fire the gun into the Officer's stomach but help came from Sergeant Edwards and Constable Bennett, who had been prominent throughout the chase, and the man was eventually subdued.

Thomas Frederick HORNSBY, Constable, Bristol City Constabulary.

Kenneth William TUCKER, Sergeant, Port of Bristol Authority Police.

A series of offences involving the use of firearms culminated in a man armed with a sawn-off shotgun robbing a taxi-driver. Police efforts to trace the culprit were intensified and special arrangements were put into operation. Constable Hornsby, a dog handler, was on plain clothes duty when he saw a man acting suspiciously. The Constable, leaving his dog in a van, approached the man and asked him whether he was carrying a firearm. The man started to walk away but Constable Hornsby followed him, whereupon the man attempted to draw a revolver from beneath his jacket. Constable Hornsby immediately closed with him and a struggle ensued during which a shot was fired from the weapon. The man broke away and the Constable then released the dog which made straight for the gunman who savagely kicked its head and stunned it. The man then ran away. Constable Hornsby gave chase and again tackled the gunman who finally broke away and made good his escape. Information was passed to the Port of Bristol Authority Police and later Sergeant Tucker saw the man and challenged him, whereupon he drew a sawn-off shotgun from beneath his raincoat, pointed it at Sergeant Tucker and threatened to shoot him. He then ran off across some waste ground to the railway line, climbed a wire fence and took up a position near some bushes. Sergeant Tucker followed him and when he was approximately thirty yards away the man levelled his gun at the officer and commanded him to stay where he was. The officer continued to advance and endeavoured to reason with him and after some time the Sergeant thought he was going to surrender. At that point, however, some other police officers appeared on the scene whereupon the man put the gun to his head and took his own life by shooting himself through the right temple.
