AIR FORCE DEPARTMENT

Whitehall, London S.W.1.

17th September 1968.

The QUEEN has been graciously pleased to approve the following award:

Air Force Cross

Flight Lieutenant Arthur Albert George RIDGE (1609181), Royal Air Force.

On 18th June 1968, Flight Lieutenant Ridge was the pilot of a helicopter of No. 22 Squadron, Valley, alerted by the Snowdonia Mountain Rescue Co-ordinator to rescue an injured climber. Within four minutes the helicopter was airborne for Bangor hospital to collect a civilian doctor whose assistance was considered essential. Arriving in the area of the accident, Flight Lieutenant Ridge found that low rolling cloud obscured the mountain peaks and much of the ground on the leeward side. After twenty minutes searching, he briefly saw the injured man, with several companions, but was immediately forced to climb to avoid being hemmed in by the mountains and swirling cloud. Flight Lieutenant Ridge then realized that he must land the doctor on the windward side of the mountain, where the cloud was higher. During a reconnaissance, he found that the only possible site was on a small outcrop of rock which sloped down from a cliff face. As he could neither land nor hover into wind, and was still hampered by cloud, he rested the two front wheels on the rock, to give the most stable possible platform from which the doctor could be lowered. This was achieved, whereupon Flight Lieutenant Ridge backed the helicopter away. After refuelling, Flight Lieutenant Ridge returned to the mountain fifty minutes later. The first attempt to pick up the casualty was thwarted, because cloud obliterated the landing site. A thousand feet lower down the mountain, Flight Lieutenant Ridge made contact with a climbing party, who told him that the climbers accompanying the injured man had no means of lowering him down the mountain. Conscious of the fact that the helicopter provided the only means of immediate rescue, he decided to continue his attempts to land on the ridge. After several unsuccessful approaches, he eventually touched down on the two front wheels, but cloud began to swirl around him. He experienced difficulty in controlling the helicopter which was out of wind. However, holding this position, Flight Lieutenant Ridge was just able to get the doctor and the casualty on board, before being forced to fly backwards into clear air. In carrying out this rescue, in conditions which would have fully justified abandonment of the operation, Flight Lieutenant Ridge showed outstanding tenacity, great courage, and superb airmanship.

17th September 1968.
