Although colestid is effective in all types of hypercholesterolaemia, it is medically most appropriate in patients with Frederickson's type II hyperlipoproteinaemia. Dietary therapy specific for the type of hypercholesterolaemia should be the initial treatment of choice. Excess body weight may be an important factor and weight reduction should be attempted prior to drug therapy in the over-weight. The use of drugs should be considered only when reasonable attempts have been made to obtain satisfactory results with non-drug methods. When drug therapy is begun, the patient should be instructed of the importance of adhering to the correct diet POM	24th May 1993
