By Letters of the 18th past from Otranto, we have Advice of the Arrival at the Port of Brindisi, and of the proceeding again from thence, of another Fleet of Transports for Corfu, with Soldiers, Arms, and Provisions, under the Convoy of a Venetian Man of War of the first Rate called the Holy League; and that the Master of a Bark dispatched to the said Port of Otranto by the General of Malta, for Refreshments, confirmed the Accounts we had before of the brave Defence made by the Garrison of Corfu under the Command of General Schulenbourg; adding, that the Turks had suffered very much by the Sallies made by the Besieged, and by the Fire from the Place; and that they had erected 4 Batteries, one by Mount Abramo, another by that of St. Salvatore, a third at the Head of Mandrocchio, and the other at Guvin.

Genova, Sept. 14. The King of Sicily came to Chambery on the 9th Instant, and, as the Advices from thence tell us, will continue there some Time: His Majesty came without any Troops, nor are there any in Savoy. Deal, Sept. 16. On the 13th Instant in the Night, and Part of the following Day, we had a violent Storm, by which some Merchant-ships lost their Anchors and Cables, and some were obliged to cut their Masts; but we do not hear of any lost, except two small Colliers which were driven ashore to the Northward of this Town, and staved. Last Night came into the Downes His Majesty's Ship Queenborough, by which we have an Account that His Majesty's Ships Monk and Assistance were Yesterday safe under Dungeness; and that His Majesty's Ship the Superbe was driven in the Storm towards the French Coast.
